INSIDIOUS EYE STRAIN

We use this adjective advisedly.

Sufferers from Eyestrain may have perfect vision and therefore do not suspect the presence of any eye defect.

The motive power of the entire human organism is Nerve Energy.

Normal eyes, it is computed utilize about 20% of this Nerve Energy, but when Eyestrain is present, a much larger proportion is required. Hence defective eyes, through their consumption of an excessive amount of Nerve Energy may seriously affect the functioning of other organs of the body and produce ill health.

WOMAN COULD HARDLY WALK

Mrs. Horn Tells how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health

Hamilton, Ont.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and would not be without it now. I had a female trouble so badly I could hardly walk and I was all run-down and could hardly get around to do my housework. I would be in bed three or four days at a time. I was told by a friend to try your Vegetable Compound. I did, and by the time I took two bottles I was beginning to get around again. I took ten bottles in all, and now I am all right again and doing my own work. I have six grown-ups to work for, so I have plenty to do. I also used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, and I think it is good. But I owe my health to the Vegetable Compound, and I think if more of it was used women would be better off. I would not be without it if it cost much more."—Mrs. NELLIE JAMESON, 805 East Cannon Street, Hamilton, Ontario.

Do you feel broken down, nervous and weak sometimes? Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is excellent to take at such a time. It always helps, and if taken regularly and persistently, will relieve this condition. G

CURSE O' LOVE

A Story of Love and its Test

By MILDRED BARBOUR

CHAPTER 17.

AN INTRUDER IN PARADISE.

Carson and Philip Kendall ran the shining new car into the garage and scrambled down the narrow, sandy path to the bungalow, drowsing on the beach in the sun.

"A peach of a place for a honeymoon," remarked Carson appreciatively. "But it looks to me as if you had too many neighbors." His gaze ran the length of the beach, where other bungalows were tucked in sheltered angles of the cliff.

"We're quite alone," explained Kendall. "All the other houses are closed. This isn't the season."

"The season!" repeated Carson and laughed. "What a lot I have to learn about the world and its ways, after ten years of exile!"

Norma, cool and refreshed after her plunge, prettily dressed, showing no trace of her recent emotion, was waiting for them on the screened veranda.

"Ah Foo is mixing cocktails—you'll want them before lunch," she announced, when the presentations had been made and Carson had been prettily welcomed.

"You knew what you were about, old man," murmured Carson, when he and Phil had gone up-stairs. "If I'd been you, I'd have run off with her the first day I met her."

His friend looked at him soberly. "You see now why I wanted to be square with her? She's too sweet to be the victim of a shameful deception. If she doesn't know the truth—and I can't believe somehow that she does—it would kill her pride to find out."

Carson, lounging in a cretonne-covered chair, stared frankly and admiringly at Norma.....

The luncheon more than came up to expectations. Served by Ah Foo's expert hands, it was of an excellence that King Carson, accustomed to the slipshod cooking of the Mexican oil camps, could scarcely credit.

They had their coffee on the screened veranda. Carson, lounging in a cretonne-covered chair, stared frankly and admiringly at Norma, as she performed the pretty office of filling egg-shell cups, adding cream and sugar, and handing them about.

"You may smoke," she offered, but, when Carson offered her a cigarette, she shook her head smilingly. "I'm frightfully old-fashioned. I've never learned how."

Carson, having met her father, having dined at the ridiculous pink Venetian palace, having shrewdly appraised both, could scarcely believe that she belonged to such a background. She was so sweet and fresh hand simple and unaffected. Her clear skin needed no artifice; her blue eyes were candid and serene. Her voice was soft, an she spoke with a shy hesitancy that was extremely pleasing to the ear.

Through the long afternoon, while they lounged on the beach, and later, when the sun was lower, went for a swim, he found himself contrasting her voice with another that was still fresh in his ears. He wanted, more than he cared to admit to himself, to hear again the imperious, crisp tones of the girl whom he had met and married, all in one short, mad night in May.

As he watched the young couple in their happiness, he caught himself wondering, half-wistfully, what it would be like to be married—really married—to the girl whose veiled image was still so vivid in his memory. He had never wanted to be married. He had always prized his freedom; he liked the chance of adventure that each new dawn brought, without any ties or obligations to bind him. Suddenly everything seemed different. The tang of adventure was not so keen, the lure of the far horizon had lessened.

Was it the sight of his friend and his bride, so happy, apparently? Or was it the strange fact of his own marriage—if that amazing ceremony in the dawn of a May morning could be termed such? He had no answer to his questions and so, in his own fashion, he shrugged them away.

Norma tactfully left the two men alone, soon after dinner, pleading letters to write, and they talked far into the morning. They had ten years of reminiscences to account on each side.

Next morning, when they were alone, Kendall asked Norma:

"What do you think of King? Isn't he a prince?"

"He's splendid!" she declared sincerely, but her heart was heavy. King Carson was too splendid, she thought. He and Philip belonged to the same class. Life on the frontier of civilization had rendered Carson breezy, while Philip had become more quiet, more reserved. But, fundamentally, they were alike; each was the scion of an excellent family, each the product of an exclusive university.

Norma felt outclassed, awkward, shy. She wondered what Philip could possibly see in her. She envied the two men their social ease, their complete lack of self-consciousness. She was miserable with her imaginings.

She acquiesced, when Philip said to her that evening:

"Norma, darling, would you mind frightfully if we went back to town at the end of this week? I hate the thought of leaving here, but I've a very important bit of business to attend to."

But she cried herself to sleep.

CANADA'S NATIONAL MUSEUM

Long before the days of Confederation, in 1844, the first Director of the Geological Survey, Sir William Logan, commenced a natural history museum which has existed continuously since then and is now known as the National Museum of Canada. Each year this institution sends out field parties to widely separated parts of the Dominion to make investigations in natural history and ethnology, and to augment the already vast collections of specimens housed in the Museum at Ottawa. Eleven parties are in the field this summer, five for anthropolgical work, five for biological, and one for mineralogical, in addition to the field parties of the Geological Survey, whose work is so closely associated with that of the Museum.

BEET SALAD.

Cook desired amount of beets until tender. Slice, place in a deep dish, add mint leaves, chopped 1 clove, garlic, cut fine, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons olive oil and cover the whole with vinegar. Serve very cold. (Amount of salt and olive oil is for 2 bunches medium-sized beets.) This salad keeps a long time, and can be used with other vegetables, same as the plain boiled beet. We like it better.

"My dear, our automobile looks so cheap beside the one our neighbors have. We ought to get the latest make."

"I know we ought, but this is the only house I have to mortgage."

"SAFEGUARDING Your Good Times-"

"A FEW precious holidays . . the innate tendency of a limited wardrobe to lose its freshness with amazing quickness . . . a Lux bath overnight for the sport-skirt, the silk hose, the underthings . . . —perfect safety to all delicate garments—then a satisfying, clean-from-top-to-toe feeling the next day, with none of the embarrassment attendant upon soiled clothes . . . Fortify the week-end bag with LUX!"

[The above letter was written by Mrs. George A. Lyght, Hamilton, Ontario.]

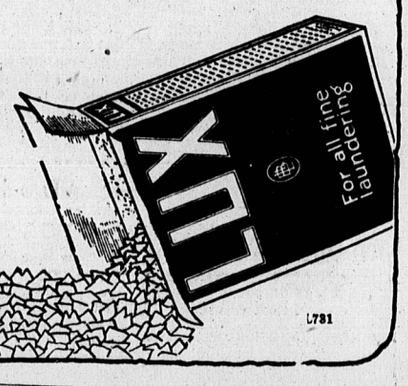
Safety

Thousands of letters are sent us by Canadian women. In all of these, the outstanding feature is safety . . . the fact that Lux will not shrink woollens, will not fade colours, will not endanger any fabric entrusted to a LUX cleansing . . . . these are the qualities most appreciated by LUX users.

The cleansing and protective qualities of LUX are not accidental. They result from the scientific preparation of the LUX flakes.



"Do not experiment, madam, use LUX and be sure."

TIMBER ON INDIAN RESERVES

The total quantity of timber cut for sale on Indian reserves in Canada in the fiscal year 1926, was approximately ninety million feet board measure and in addition to this the Indians cut for their own use about seven million feet of timber for building and fencing purposes and twenty thousand cords of wood for fuel, besides an unreported quantity of ash, maple, hickory, etc., for the native manufacture of snowshoes, baskets, axe handles, and similar products.

FOREST EXPERIMENT STATIONS

The Department of the Interior, Canada, maintains several forest experiment stations, such as that at Petawawa on the Ottawa river. Here the different species of trees are studied just as are farm crops at agricultural experiment stations. The object is to ascertain under what conditions of cutting, thinning, etc., the different species of trees reproduce most readily and grow most rapidly.

DISTRIBUTION OF FISH FRY

Over 50,000,000 whitefish fry were distributed from Gull Harbour hatchery, lake Winnipeg, over a wide area extending as far as Berens river about 100 miles from the hatchery. This long transfer was made possible by virtue of a miniature hatchery set up on the Canadian Government steamer Bradbury. With the exception of last year when 51,000,000 fry were planted out, this is the largest distribution since 1920 from Gull Harbour hatchery.
