The Greek Elections

carried through by a Government formed with the support of the majority of the electorate. The present "Caretaker" Government has not felt able to proceed far along the unpopular road of economic stringency.

Competent authorities consider that the prolongation of political uncertainty in the absence of elections, and the consequent delay in introducing the necessary financial and economic reforms, would spell financial and economic disaster.

This, it is emphasized in London, is perhapes the most cogent of all the reasons for holding the Greek elections as soon as possible.

There are other reasons to which the Foreign Office statement draws attention. Thus, there is are desire manifested by the Security Council and shared by the United Kingdom Government, that British troops should be withdrawn from Greece with the least possible delay. There are international arrangements completed between the Greek, United Kingdom, United States and French Governments (in which the Russian Government unfortunately decided not to join) for the elections, ensuring as far as possible that they are free and fair.

Accordingly, the United Kingdom Government declares it to be both the right and the duty of the Greek people, Parties and Press to get an overwhelming poll on the 31st of March.

Confusion Hits Nazi Spy Center As Swedish Police Expel Wagner

By NEA Foreign Service

STOCKHOLM — (NEA — Arrest, in December 1944, of the former manager of the German-owned Scandinavian Telegraph Bureau's Stockholm office sent Swedish police on a spy hunt, and caused considerable commotion in the "Radio Bureau."

Police charged John Alexander Loennegren with supplying the Gestapo information on a hundred or so Norwegian refugees, for a total consideration of 15,000 Kronor. Loennegren in turn confessed that his source of information had been Inspector Paulson, a high official of the Swedish Alien's Commission.

Paulson himself was arrested on Jan. 4, 1945, on charges of espionage and misuse of his official position. It turned out that this man, who for many years had been the chief supervisor of the activities of foreigners in Sweden, had been a paid Nazi agent all along.

(Note the curious fact that Major Wagant, while maintaining headquarters at the "House of German Tourism", has an OKW, or High Command, telephone number!)

Attached to this telegraphic order was the inter-office memo:

"Accordingly, the following employees of Bureau Wagner remain here in Sweden: Blothow, Henke (courier), Roehmelt, Schuhmann, and the S.S. (Elite Guard) special leader chett, who is attached to the Consulate at Gothenburg."

On Feb. 21, the Radio Bureau relays the following inquiry to Berlin, addressed to "Egmont":

"On Feb. 19, the head of the England Committee ("Leiter des England Tasschusses"), Heiss, arrived here in Stockholm on a visit of 10-14 days. Do you know about this visit and its background, and are you interested in further information about it? Request an immediate reply as H. perhaps also will get in touch with me."

The sender of this communication was Legation Secretary Kraemer, alias "Hasso" (He is not to be confused with the new arrival, Hesse).

The recipient — "Egmont" —was a man high up in the ranks of the S.D., (named Biselhar Wirsing), who had written a book about the United States shortly before the war. Wirsing, former editor-in-chief of the "Muenchner Neueste Nachrichten," Munich's largest daily, was also a member of the Reich Chamber of Culture and a close friends and associate of Himmler's.

Hesse's arrival in Stockholm coincided with the forced departure of Col. Wagner and his staff, but he was not sent to replace the Gestapo chieftain. Indeed, on Feb. 28, "Pandur" sends this revealing dispatch to Berlin:

"1. In view of the fact that the Kommando Meldegebiet (Command and Report District, i.e. the Gestapo office Bureau Wagner) has been without a chief since Feb. 20, and no orders have been received from you, I have decided personally to take over the internal treasury and administrative supervision.

"2. Since the departure of the Doctor (Wagner), the Legation has been referring to me all cases relating to K.M.III.

"3. Request information as to:

"(a) Whether it is planned to fill the vacancy with a new chief;

"(b) If yes, who has been selected for the post and when may he be expected to arrive here;

"(c) Whether I shall continue to exercise the internal supervision until the new appointee arrives;

"(d) In case the host country (Sweden) refuses to grant an entry permit to the person in question, is K.M. then to be liquidated?"

In this message — despite the bureaucratic style used — the bitter rivalry, the mutual distrust, and the relentless tug-of-war between the two spy outfits are fully apparent.

"Pandur" hopes with all his heart that nobody else will be sent by the Gestapo to take the place of the expelled Wagner, or, if somebody does show up, that the Swedes won't let him in. In the meantime, he himself has taken over the Gestapo shop.

Even more revealing is another dispatch sent on the same day to Berlin by "Pandur" and "Hasso" jointly—a unique occurrence, indicative of its importance. They radio:

"In view of the continually deteriorating situation, both Pandur and Hasso consider that a personal interview at the suggested date — March 6-9 — is absolutely necessary. Will therefore arrive in Berlin by official plane. Further postponement of meeting, inadvisable as fundamental issues have to be discussed."

Now comes the real tip-off, in another of those informal postscripts for office use only:

"Regarding these telegrams: It has been observed that a new Himmler man has made his appearance at the MILA ("Reichs Haupt Sicherheits Amt," or Chief Security Office) who thinks everybody else is a slacker. On the other hand, Kraemer and Wentlau understand clearly that their liberty of movement will be more and more restricted, especially since Link's supervision is exercised in rather clumsy fashion.

"Generally speaking, the atmosphere has been tense since Wagner's departure, with the result that at the MILA (office of the Military Attache) all persons on duty will be equipped with automatic pistols as of March 1."

Wortlaut eines Telegramms von Berlin betreffend Uberstellung des Dr. Fritz Wagner und seine Ausreise von Schweden und Verwendung des übrigen Kontors personal.

Tel.Nr.18. vom 18.2.45. von Ludwig - Otto an : Hasso.

This is the photocopy, made by Major Wagant, House of German Tourism, Room 524, Telephone OKWJ2-67-378, for further instructions from Otto and assignment of quarters. Rest of personnel remains."

The expulsion of these two key Gestapo agents caused general confusion at Nazi spy headquarters in Stockholm, some of it in military quarters. A number of messages from Herr X's photostatic dossier bear eloquent testimony to this.

A dispatch, No. 18, from Berlin, Feb. 19, orders:

"Doctor will immediately upon his return report to Major Wagant, Haus des Deutschen Fremdenverkehrs. (House of German Tourism), Room 524. Telephone OKWJ2-67-378, for further instructions from Otto and assignment of quarters. Rest of personnel remains."

German Gestapo chief in Sweden, Col. Fritz Wagner, is expelled from that country on Feb. 21, 1945. He is shown leaving Sweden for good through the pass control gate at Bromma Airport, Inter-Scandinavian
