Premier's Gift Auto Caused Wild Turmoil

LONDON, Oct. 8.—An automobile caused turmoil in the House of Commons yesterday. The machine was one presented to Prime Minister MacDonald by Sir Alexander Grant, a boyhood friend grown wealthy. MacDonald's enemies have been waiting for an opportunity to mention his acceptance of this gift, and of an endowment fund consisiting of the income from 30,000 one pound preference shares of stock since parliament convened for the special session.

Thei rchance came when Mr. J. R. Clynes, government spokesman, replying to a question, as to whether an increase in salary for the prime minister was contemplated, declared MacDonald would be party to no increase until the same came spontaneously from the house

Sir Kingsley Wood fired the charge.

"Has consideration been given." he asked, "to the fact that the present prime minister has found his emoluments insufficient and has had to go to a private citizen for funds."

Instantly the house was in an uproar. There were shouts from the Labor benches, cries of "you dirty dog" and "you low-down hound."

Finally, above the turmoil, the speaker was able to make himself heard and ruled Sir Kingsley's question out of order, whereat Labor cheered.

Women of India Demand Seats In Legislatures

(United Press)

LONDON, Oct. 8.—From distant India comes a cry of the women for further political rights and privileges. The Women's Freedom League which, under the leadership of Mrs. Pankhurst, used to smash windows and pour kerosene into the mail boxes in an endeavor to convince men that women should vote, has received from India an account of the struggle going on there to give women the right to membership in the legislatures.

At a representative meeting of Indian women held recently in Simla under the presidency of Lady Shafi, the question of the disqualification of women for election as members of the several legislatures was dicussed. The following resolution, supported not only by the Simla women but by the Bombay Women's Council and the Women's Indian Association, Madras, was passed unanimously:

"This meeting of Indian women, belonging to different parts of India, places on record its very strong opinion that the disability of women to stand as candidates for the legislatures be removed forthwith, and that the rules under the government of India act be amended accordingly."

The memorandum of the reforms committee states that "it is not necessary to recapitulate the arguments for and against woman franchise in British India. Our contention is that it is an anomaly that women may not be members of the legislatures in provinces where they are granted the right to vote. We feel that the right to vote ought to include the right to be a member of the legislatures."

More Than Million Face Fifth Jobless Winter in England

LONDON, Oct. 8.—Great Britain's army of more than a million jobless people is facing the fifth winter of unemployment. The permanent solution of this post-war problem is as far away as ever in the opinion of economists.

Inasmuch as three different governments—Coalition, Conservative and Labor—have dealt with the question, which still awaits solution, it would appear to the detached observer that the problem is one of after war economics rather than partisan politics.

For five years the unemployment question has been a sort of urchin's joy to whatever political party happened to be in opposition. In fact it seems to be a problem that is more readily grasped by an opposition than by whichever government happens to be responsible for the conduct of affairs.

The Labor government, not without pride, points to the latest unemployment figures available—1,149,100—as about 120,000 less than for the corresponding figures a year ago. This, however, leaves the minimum at well over a million, where it has been for the past five winters and where in the view of not a few economists it is to remain permanently.

The crux of the question, according to a spokesman for the Labor government, lies in the ship-building, cotton, and engineering industries which have never recovered from the disruption in which they were found at the close of the war.

This spokesman declared that Britain's army of more than a million jobless can never be put to work until the solution of the problem of German reparations has restored the economic equilibrium not only of Germany but of Europe and the world. Closely akin to this problem, in the view of economists of the Labor party, is the question of trade relations with Russia. As the Dawes plan has just been launched and the House of Commons, when Parliament resumes at the end of this month, will debate the treaty which the MacDonald government negotiated with Soviet Russia, the future alone will determine how these latest international agreements will affect world trade conditions.

The unemployment dole is regarded by both philanthropists and economists as a necessary evil—inadequate to take care of the needs of its recipients and demoralizing because payments are made without any return in labor.

A family consisting of father and mother and four children, if eligible to the unemployment dole will receive 31 shillings a week this winter, as against 24 shillings a week last winter.

Cardinal Mercier Expresses Belief In World's Future

(United Press)

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—Cardinal Mercier, Archbishop of Malines, Belgium, whose defiance of Germany during the invasion of his country at the beginning of the war attracted universal attention, has written a letter to George L. Duval, of this city, in which he gives his hopes for the future of the world from the moral point of view.

"The world at this hour," writes the eminent prelate, "is a great invalid. All eyes are turned to the physicians, all lips anxiously asking, is there hope of recovery? Have you a remedy, the remedy? The physicians have no concrete answer or rather, they give divers answers all at once. The more the consultations and remedies multiply the more we realize that we are at a standstill.

"Optimist or pessimist, which shall it be? From a hypothetical consideration of the situation in the present premises, there is something to justify and explain either tendency, but, in my humble judgment, under the broader view which should be decisive, optimism must prevail. Be confident in spite of all, were my words to my fellow citizens at one of the darkest hours of recent history. No matter how troubled, how close to disaster and despair conditions may be, let every one keep his head erect and his heart steady, because discouragement has never begotten energy, and energy alone breeds triumph.

"O, ye young men, compatriots, men of the people and representatives of the people, whether of Belgium or of other countries, do ye wish to help your brothers, the allies of yesterday, in the struggle we have made for ten years to attain peace? Then be men of energy. Should some vacillate or yield, be ye, the controlling majority, at all events steadfast.

"Alas! I know that both nations and individuals have undergone a great change: self-seeking, the thirst for pleasure, the lust for money have too often overcome self denial and devotion to the common weal, while political partisanship and class strife have impeded unity of action and have rended the ommonwealth asunder. In this, however, I recognize the effects of nerve collapse due to the hyperstrain of protracted war. A few more swings, and the pendulum will return to the vertical. Here in Belgium and in France, there is no doubt that the rising generation gives promise of an abundant reserve of national energy, faith and discipline. Respect for and love of authority are growing, clearing the air, spreading currents of confidence, casting seeds of peace.

"If all countries agreed to submit to one and the same moral authority, it would be possible to keep the peace. But should one of them deny this moral authority, seek alliances to build up its predominance over others, the peril of war must inevitably ensue.

"The notorious 'international' dreamt of by socialism or communism is really a universal and permanent organization for war: the very antithesis of peace.

"Bolshevism, the last end of social dissolution, is radically atheistic. Antibolshevism, the restoration of order, can only be built upon God.

"Christ and He alone is King of peace. He teaches us that we are all brothers, that we have one and the same Father in heaven, and that the predominant law of our life, in which all other commandments are compassed, is charity. The love of all for their Father, and for the sake of the Father the love of brothers for one another. In such measure as this love pervades, in so far will peace reign over the world.

"In order, therefore, to work for universal peace, it is necessary to build up the gospel's rule. Let all believers set to work on this apostolate. Let all Christian nations, without mental reservation or dread of facing the truth and its consequences, make a loyal effort to bring about the realization of Our Lord's supreme wish as He was about to ascend to His Father: 'Utunum sint'—'That they may all be one.'

"Christ said to us, and His word deceives not; do you wish to live the real life, not that which passes and is ended by death, but life eternal, with the full satisfaction it brings to the deepest aspirations of the soul, then draw it from knowledge of the true God and of His envoy among us, our Lord Jesus Christ."

HELEN BULLIS IN OVERALLS REPAIRS AIRPLANES AT ELKO

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 8.—The only girl in the field division of the United States Aerial Mail Service is Miss Helen Bullis, formerly of Omaha, Neb., stationed at Elko, Nevada.

Miss Bullis, bobbed hair, young and pretty, decided three years ago that teaching at a Chicago institute for the deaf and dumb was not a very exciting position, and cast her lot with the mailmen of the sky.

At Elko, attired in overalls, she works as any other member of the field staff and according to her own admission, is just a little bit envious of the men pilots, for only men can fly.

"I never fail to get a thrill when I see an airplane come swooping down from the sky and hear its motor humming and throbbing," Miss Bullis said when in Salt Lake recently. "I think of the glorious adventure it must be to go skimming through the clouds, and how fortunate men are to be able to do those things. As it is, I have to content myself with asking the pilots how the weather was, and to listen to their interesting experiences."

Miss Bullis, learning daily from the men employes, hopes before long to know more about airplanes and airplane engines than any other girl in the world.

Ruthless Secrecy Marks Daily Doings Of Russian Police

(United Press)

MOSCOW, Oct. 8.—To Russians the Cheka is the most feared organization in Russia, the very mention of the name connoting terror and ruthlessness. Its chief purpose is to suppress counter revolutionary activities and to punish all who attempt to injure the present Soviet regime.

In a larger sense the Cheka resembles the American Secret Service or the English Scotland Yard, except it has much greater scope, exercises plenary powers, acts as "judge, jury and executioner," maintains its own army, prisons, and is all powerful in every department of Russian life. There is no appeal from its decisions.

With the Red Army, the Cheka constitutes the most formidable weapon the Bolsheviks posses for maintaining themselves in power. No person, no group, no community, however influential, is strong enough to resist the allembracing tentacles of the Cheka octopus which reach out to every nook and corner of Russia. The number of counter-revolutionaries and political prisoners it put to death during the revolution and terror runs into tens of thousands.

Since the late Premier Lenine introduced the so called "new economy policy" of the government, the Cheka has been rechristened with a view to depriving it in the minds of the Russians of its sinister aspect. It now goes by the mild name of "state political department," or "G.U.P.," these being the initial letters of the Russian words. In it are employed many of the agents of the old Czarist secret service, whose knowledge of old political ofenders is of special value.

The G.U.P. is the most highly organized and severely disciplined of all Soviet institutions, and its members are the most devoted to the Communistic cause. Any disclosure of its plans by an employe or agent would mean certain death. Its working force numbers hundreds of thousands of men and women. Every employe of every communistic institution throughout Russia is a potential agent or spy of the G.P.U.

Felix Djerzhinsky, the mild-speaking, soft-mannered Pole who brought the organization up to its present high state of efficiency, has been elevated to the chairmanship of the Supreme Economic Council, but he still directs the broad policy of the G.P.U.

Within the building serving as the G.P.U headquarters is a great courtyard, along the sides of which are steelbarred cells. The occupants are regarded as the more dangerous of the political prisoners. They are awaiting either death or deportation to Siberia for life.

"Expressionism" in Art Traced To World War

(United Press)

BERLIN, Oct. 8.—If the school of painters which now has the upper hand in Germany prevails, the artist's model will have to look for another job, in the opinion of Professor Ludwig Justi, director of the National Gallery of Berlin.

"We are living in the age of 'expressionism' in art," Director Justi observed. "That means that the artist does not try to imitate and copy nature, but that he throws upon the canvas a revelation of his inner self. Thus many of our modern masters paint the figures of human beings without having any model before them. They say that the old masters used models, and that there is nothing more for the rising generation of painters to do along that line. With all the photographlike portraits that we have of women in every position and attitude, who in the world cares about additional pictures?

"What the post-war generation is looking for is the expression of personal life, of personal experience, of personal feeling," the director declares. "The growing generation of art lovers has experienced the sufferings of the world war, and it is now living in a period of unrest, of searching and seeking for the new, of casting out the old. The 'expressionistic' school of artists therefore appeals to the young people."

While believing that the "expressionistic" is the dominant art of the moment, Professor Justi is by no means sure that it will prevail. "Art is the expression of the feelings of a people in a given period," he observed. "Also, modern life moves in contrasts, and the pendulum swings much wider and more quickly today than formerly."

Tells Dyspeptics What To Eat

Avoid Indigestion, Sour Acid Stomach, Heartburn, Gas On Stomach, Etc.

Indigestion and practically all forms of stomach trouble, say medical authorities, are due nine times out of ten to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach. Chronic "acid stomach" is exceedingly dangerous and sufferers should do either one or two things.

Either they can go on a limited and often disagreeable diet, avoiding foods that disagree with them, that irritate the stomach and lead to excess acid secretion or they can eat as they please in reason and make it a practice to counteract the effect of the harmful acid and prevent the formation of gas, sourness or premature fermentation by the use of a little Bisurated Magnesia at their meals.

There is probably no better, safer or more reliable stomach antiacid than Bisuated Magnesia and it is widely used for this purpose. It has no direct action on the stomach and is not a digestent. But a teaspoonful of the powder or a couple of five grain tablets taken in a little water with the food will neutralize the excess acidity which may be present and prevent its further formation. This removes the whole cause of the trouble and the meal digests naturally and healthfully without need of pepsin pills or artificial digestents.

Get a few ounces of Bisurated Magnesia from any reliable druggist. Ask for either powder or tablets. It never comes as a liquid, milk or citrate and in the bisurated form is not a laxative. Try this plan and eat what you want at your next meal and see if this isn't the best advice you ever had on "what to eat." 28.
