The Night of the Wedding

By C. N. and A.M. WILLIAMSON

Authors of "The Lightning Conductor" and other fascinating romances of mystery and love

Copyright 1924, by Public Ledger Company

Then, once more there passed the fleeting glint; and it was either an optical illusion or else it was even more astonishing than it had seemed at first. The lights now flashed at regular intervals and with method. Almost before he knew what he did, Dagon found himself reading in a whisper, "S. O. S. S. O. S."!

"My God! Is it possible?" he asked himself. "Have I gone mad? Or is this happening?"

He did not feel in the least mad. And, apparently, it was happening! Very faint as the lights were—so faint that, unless his eyes had been on the pool when they began, Dagon would have missed them—they were unmistakably not moonlight. When the detective had assured himself that somebody was signaling for help by means of lights thrown on the pool he supposed that a torch was being used at a window or on the roof—or, possibly, focused from a corner of the garden behind screening trees. But he leaned far out to peer in all directions, and found that every visible window was dark. No light flashed from the roof, nor from behind trees. Nevertheless, those faint green flickerings still troubled the pool, dim as the pale flame of a glow-worm, yet plainly visible to a watching eye. "S O S"—"S O S."

But—was the gleam on the water—or under it?

Ah, that was what it looked like! As if the light shot up from beneath!

"Good Lord!" gasped Dagon. "I've got it at last!"

Without another word, or even without another thought, he kicked off his shoes and, taking the electric lantern he had got ready for his excursion to the cellar, he paddled, panther-like, out of the room.

How he blessed himself for going to the window! If he had not looked down at the pool at that moment he would have missed this wonderful chance. But that was his luck! He believed that fate had drawn him to the window at precisely the right time. Instead of the vague prowl through the cellars he had intended, now he was able to fix upon a definite goal. His brain felt singularly clear, as if those pale green flashes had lit the dark places where doubt had lurked. The thick cobwebs of mystery had been brushed away. Behind them Dagon could almost see a door!

At last he understood why the architect's industrious measurements had been made in vain. Nothing had been discovered in the house, because there was nothing to discover—except a way out. The "hidden hall" existed, as the name of the house, indeed, indicated with its impudent play upon words; but it was under the pool in the Persian Garden.

Somebody in those spacious old days of the late seventeenth or earliest eighteenth century had been very clever; probably the Sir John Hidden who had made the Persian Garden. First he had brought in workmen secretly, no doubt, most likely foreigners. They had created the "hidden hall," for who could tell what fantastic uses? They had roofed it with glass (those signals seen through the water proved that) in order to let in light from above, and the pool had completed the plan.

All this was easy enough to deduce now, Dagon thought. But—how account for the light of the signals?

The water was deep and it would need a strong light to shine through, even to give those faint flashes he had seen. Oil lamps would not suffice, even if the flashes could be managed. Some one down there might have a powerful electric torch which, used in darkness, would produce the effect. This suggestion, however, did not appeal to the detective's common sense. The call for help could only have been sent out by one in danger—a prisoner who wished to escape and sought every expedient. It was not probable that a prisoner would be provided with a large electric torch, especially if that prisoner were the person in Dagon's mind. Yet who, unless Sir Rawdon Wells or Sir Rawdon's father had done it, could have fitted the "hidden hall" with electricity?

This was one of the first questions that Dagon asked himself when he had stopped to think consecutive thoughts again. And though he had no answer ready, he was strangely sure that Rawdon Wells had not lied to him.

"If there is a hidden room, which I very much doubt, the secret of it has been lost to our family for generations," Wells had solemnly assured him. Could some outsider have discovered the place by accident? There was one outsider who—Dagon was obstinately convinced—might have done so. And it would not have been impossible for that person to make such changes or improvements as seemed good to him.

Not only was Dagon certain in where he must seek for the way into the hidden hall, he was also certain of the signaler's identity. It was not Eve Carroll who had sent that silent call for help. The spoiled petted beauty's boasted "war work" would not have necessitated the learning of wireless telegraphy, nothing so troublesome and boring. She had come over from New York to Paris and London on the pretext of "work." Dagon pictured her selling programs at matinees, however, or reading to convalescent officers. "Stunts" more strenuous, he thought, would not have been in her line, though no doubt she'd been lavish with her money. But Pan—brave little Pan—she was the girl to pick up wireless telegraphy while other flappers read novels and ate chocolates. She was the girl whose presence of mind in danger would prompt her to use the knowledge she had in an emergency. It was Pan, his lost sister, in the red cloak who had been urged by the call of kindred blood to summon the brother her soul remembered!

"I'll save her," Dagon promised himself. "I'll save her all right, no fear. It's meant to happen that way!"

The old house was dark and very quiet. It was an hour when those under its roof should be asleep. The detective had purposely waited until late for his visit to the cellar. But he walked cautiously lest some board should creak and some ear catch the sound.

Take Salts For A Kidney Backache

Too much rich food forms acids which excite and overwork the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Flush the kidneys occasionally to relieve them like you relieve the bowels, removing acids, waste and poison, else you may feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, the stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get irritated, obliging one to get up two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste, begin drinking water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine and bladder disorders disappear.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help prevent serious kidney and bladder disorders.

By all means, drink lots of good water every day. Have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year. 110

JACK AND JILL

AND HERE'S JACK

This is one day's chapter of the story of "Jack and Jill." Children who read the story and cut out the pictures every day will have the whole "Jack and Jill" story at the end of this week.

Jack was on the porch when his playmate Jill, came running across the lawn. He had just been to town with his mother and was all dressed up in a bright blue suit with tan shoes and hose.

"Please come with me to fetch a pail of water," cried Jill.

"Of course I will," answered Jack.

"But not until you change your suit," cried his mother.

"I won't hurt it," protested Jack.

"Now, Jack," answered his mother, "please do as I say." So Jill waited on the porch while Jack went in to change his suit.

Meeting At Argyle Shore

The annual meeting of the Bonshow, Egg Circle, was held in the hall at Argyle Shore on the evening of Feb. 25th. A large number of men and women of the district were in attendance, and the best of good feeling and enthusiasm was expressed. The reports covering the year showed a comfortable increase in the business done. The circle is one of the best in the province, and it is expected that the present year's business will be the best yet.

Mr. G. Davison of the Federal Poultry Branch who was present, spoke at some length along the lines of the work that had been accomplished during the past season. He pointed out the benefit of organization, and gave some good sound advice on matters pertaining to the Poultry industry. Mr. J. H. Myers, Commissioner of Agriculture followed, and spoke along co-operative lines, dealing largely with the question of dairying, pointing out the progress that had been made and intimating the progressive steps that were contemplated for future development. He also pointed out the advantages of selling hogs and lambs co-operatively, and advised sticking closely together, if any progress was to be made in the selling of farm products. Mr. W. Shaw of the Provincial Department of Agriculture, after commending the Circle on the excellent work accomplished during the year, went on to deal with the Disease Free Area plan and the organization of the Boys' Clubs. Mr. A. J. McNevin, and others also spoke, and heartily commended the organization on its season's work. On motion an unanimous vote in favor of the establishment of the Province as a disease free area was passed. Votes of thanks were also tendered the speaker of the evening for their excellent addresses.

The ladies of the district served a very dainty lunch at the close of the meeting.

For Sore Throat Use Minard's Liniment

Disease Free Area

A great measure of interest is being manifested in the establishment of P. E. Island as a disease free area. The dairyman's Association passed a resolution without a dissenting voice in favor of the plan and a number of local organizations have taken the matter up passing unanimous resolutions in its favor. Other districts are asking for action on the matter and it looks as if a very firm demand will be made on the Federal Government to have the plan established here.

There does not seem to be any reasonable excuse on the part of the farmers against the operation of this test. It is a rare opportunity to clean up the herds of the province under a very favorable scheme. The remuneration offered is substancial and the cost of the test to the stock owner is practically nil.

The Area in Quebec in which testing has been going on lately has now been pretty well completed, and the time would seem to be opportune for making a drive on Ottawa for consideration. From information at hand it would seem as if favorable action might follow a general demand for establishment of the plan in the Province. Farmers organizations should take this matter up at their annual meetings and discuss it thoroughly, and if favorable pass strong resolutions to that effect.

Young Married Women Need Mother's Advice—

MRS. PEARL STEELE
HOLDEN, MISSOURI

A GREAT many women after childbirth get up too soon and, too weak to care for the child and perform their household duties, often bring on serious derangements.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid tonic to take at this time; it is an excellent restorative, contains no harmful drugs, and can be taken in safety by nursing mothers. Thousands of mothers advise their daughters to take this grand old root and herb medicine for such conditions because of their own favorable experience with it.

Following We Publish an Interesting Letter from Mrs. Steele of Warrensburg Which Should Interest Every Mother in the Land:

Warrensburg, Mo.—"When my second child was born I got up too soon as my mother wasn't able to do for me. I could not stand on my feet without being dizzy and my back would ache so badly that I would have to lie down at times through the day. My mother had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and had a bottle of it at the time, so she begged me to take it, which I did and I cannot tell you how much better I felt after taking it. Then a year later my husband got back from overseas and we went to keeping house by ourselves and I got all run down again. I couldn't work long at a time but would have to sit down and rest. My husband kept begging me to take the Vegetable Compound again, so I have done so. I recommend it when I can as I know it is good for women's troubles and I thought you might like to know what it has done for me."—MRS. PEARL M. STEELE, 203 Main Street, Warrensburg, Mo.

Ontario Woman's Interesting Case

Mount Forest, Ontario.—"I am proud today to think I have a fine big baby boy, as healthy as a trout, and I never felt better myself. Before I took your medicine I felt weak and miserable, and had pains all through me. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I began to get stronger and those pains all left me. I am glad I found out about this medicine. I think there is none other equal to it for women who have troubles of this kind. I cannot praise the Vegetable Compound too highly for the good it has done me. Whenever I know of a woman suffering I am glad to tell her of it."—MRS. WM. RIDSDALE, R. R. No. 1, Mount Forest, Ontario.

Many such letters prove the reliability of
