RESTAURANT

and a fellow told me: "You will have to be careful of what you say there, because those people are different". I don't believe that you people here are any different from those in my own branch in Vancouver. You are just a lot of hard-working fellows, trying to make a living in one of the toughest businesses in the world.

A Worthwhile Business

"I said 'toughest', but I really did not mean that. I am proud to be in the food business, and I think it is the greatest business in the world today. We have the power to make more people happy than any other profession or business does. How many times have you seen a party leaving your business place with a smile— thanking you for a good meal? That is what I mean by making people happy, and that is why I am glad to be in the food business. The biggest thrill of my life still is to see cars lined up waiting to get into my place, not only because of financial reasons, but because I know that they have driven six miles to get to our place, and on the way have passed several other restaurants. That is what I mean by thrill—just the fact that they have driven this far to get to our place, and I am sure that this spurs on members of my staff, as well as myself, to do the very best job we can, and is another reason why I am glad I am in the food business.

"At our last Vancouver branch meeting, one of the Members asked if I liked the idea of travelling across the Country to make a speech. My answer to that is "Yes". I really do, because I have never been away from my home to visit a Convention or restaurant meeting of any kind when I have not gone back with some good ideas to more than pay for all the expenses of my trip, and I would like to suggest to you now that travelling is one of the best ways of curing that sameness on your menus. Get out into another city, and eat in another man's restaurant. You are sure to see some little differences, and right away you will want to take them home with you to apply to your own business.

"Seeing what the other fellow is doing; reading the restaurant magazines; and above all, noting the ideas in our Association Bulletins, are what will keep you abreast of what the other fellow is doing, and keep you right up-to-date.

"My own operation in Vancouver, I have been told, is quite big. But every time I go across the line to Seattle, just 150 miles away, and see the five beautiful restaurants operated by this year's President of the National Restaurant Association, Walter Clark, I always come home, not only with one or two good ideas, which I am sure he has seen some other place in his travels and brought to Seattle, and which I bring home to Vancouver, but also with the feeling that we have just a very small operation.

Canadian Restaurants and the Tourist

"At our Toronto convention, in Chicago, and from everywhere else, we are hearing about the enormous amount of American money we should get from American Tourists in the next few years. One of our principal speakers at Toronto this winter devoted his whole talk to this subject. One of his main points was that Canada has no national dish. True different localities have locally famous dishes. But we have no truly famous Canadian dish. Perhaps some of you people here could suggest a good national dish for Canada.

"If we are gong to expect the tourist to come back again, we must give him good, clean places to dine. The slogan of the National Restaurant Association this year is "TRAVEL FOLLOWS GOOD FOOD ROUTES". This applies to us in Canada, as no tourist is going to return to any locality where he did not get good food. Another point stressed by our speaker was cleanliness. Did you ever wonder why every magazine article and every speaker keep harping on cleanliness? Did you ever think that it was because most restaurants do not appear clean to them?

"Let' think about your own place for a minute. Go across the street and look at it. Wouldn't it look a lot better with a new coat of paint? Go back inside and look at your interior with the eyes of a stranger. Is it clean and inviting? Do not be deceived by the words of someone you took through the kitchen last week, who told you it was the cleanest kitchen he had ever been in. He was a visitor, and knew he was expected to say just that. That next time you show someone around your place, notice all of the corners that do not look just right. It is good to take visitors through the place. It keeps the people working on their toes if they know visitors may be expected anytime.

"I realize that, during the past war years, and also at the present time in many localities, it is a lot easier said than done; but the war is over, and your customers and mine are expecting pre-war cleanliness and service.

The Bewildering Menu

"One of the things that impresses me most, whether I am in Canada or the United States, is that, even with all the talks and the articles written on it, restaurant men everywhere still seem to think that they must have everything but the kitchen sink listed on their menus.

"In the beginning, we at the White Spot were taught the hard way about simplified menus. We had no money to buy equipment with, so as business increased, and we would have another sandwich suggested to us, we soon learned that it had to pass the test of whether our equipment could put it up. We also soon learned that every time we put a new sandwich on our menu, we found slowed up the service considerably; and so, even to this day, a sandwich must be something really new or different to be put on our menu.

"At the peak of our business, we are serving about three cars per minute, or an average of nine people per minute—which is a lot of orders to be prepared in 60 seconds!

Trend to Specialization

"When we added our dining room, we decided to serve only two things —chicken and steak; and I still believe that this is the wisest decision we could have made. When you consider the very limited menu of the largest operators of this country and the United States — Murray's, who operate the largest chain of restaurants in Canada only serve six items on their menu each day; the Honeydew cannot have any more than ten sandwiches on their list; Stouffers, in the Eastern United States, have five entrees every day; you wonder why restaurant men will continue to have ten or twelve D'Hote items and a whole book of a la' carte items, most of which they could not serve if somebody did order them, especially in these days of rationing.

"Just before the outbreak of war, specializing restaurants were springing up all over the country. This, I believe, will again become the trend. —specializing restaurants with a very simplified menu. No one chain or individual restaurant can serve all of the people, so why not pick out one item and really cook and serve it better. Think of the time and the money saved!

"For instance, in my own case— the chicken steak that is not sold today is the first sold tomorrow. We have only one vegetable—fresh frozen peas. These are contracted for each Fall, and a special dipper makes each order the same size and cost. The same goes for potatoes. In this way, it is a very easy thing to control your food cost. Think of the labour-cost saving—no high-salaried chef, but just an inexperienced housewife; a few basic recipe cards; and in less than a week your employee is experienced.

"There are many entrees that you could build a reputation on. The main thing is that it must be just a little better than the average, and when you are serving only a few items, this is not difficult.

"To mention a few out on the west coast—and I must stick to the west coast, as I know the places there better—a place in Portland, Oregon, 'Yaws' by name, is known all over the coast area for its hamburger sandwiches. In Los Angeles there is a place called the Tam-O-Shanter Inn', which sells nothing but hamburger, and it is not the kind you buy from any wholesaler, but specially ground meat. They have it from hamburger sandwiches up to a special full-coarse planked hamburger steak dinner at $2.50 per plate—and this was pre-war. The 'Lowrey Prime Rib' did [illegible] with nothing else but roast prime rib of beef [illegible] ing; and since the [illegible] age they have changed to nothing but roast turkey without losing any business. 'Skippers' in Seattle, serves just fish— and what a business they do! I name these places only to stress my point of simplified menus. At the most, three or four entrees, well-cooked and neatly served, should be sufficient.

"I have said this at meetings before, and I have been told repeatedly by operators of smaller cities that they cannot possibly serve only two or three things. I do not believe they are right. I think if they would try out the idea, they would never go back to a large menu again.

The Association

"Last January, as I left the Conference in Toronto shortly after our general meeting, I was going upstairs to get my overcoat, as we were going out to dinner with a party, when a man in the elevator congratulated me on being elected President, and said that he was very glad our new President wasn't a big shot from the East. I do not know who this man was or what part of Canada he came from. The remark 'from the East' seems to show that he must have been from west of Toronto, but I have thought more of his remark than of anything else I heard at the Convention this year.

"When I think back to our charter meeting in the Chateau Laurier in Ottawa, and remember how surprised I was that a busy man like Walter Harris, head of all the Murray's restaurants, could take time enough to do all the preliminary work of writing innumerable letters to all of us across Canada to arrange a suitable date for everyone, and to have a rough draft of a constitution ready for us to go over; and to think of the time he must have spent looking for a capable manager before he came across such a jewel as George Hougham, and to remember how he has remained the guiding spirit of this organization, giving most freely of his time and spending his own money to further the interests of all restaurateurs; and then to think of our first president, Leo Dandurand, who certainly could not be considered a 'small restaurant operator' who gave just as freely of his time and money, and his very valuable connections in the business world; and last year's president, Vince Gregory as I remembered him on the Western tour last Fall, the wonderful talks he gave throughout the West, the favourable impression he left with all of us small operators—when I think of these men, I am amazed.

These men might be considered 'big shots from the East' but my own dealings with them for the past four years have convinced me that they have been working unselfishly towards the betterment of all restaurateurs in Canada, and I am quite sure that, when you have listened to Charle Bronsdon's talks, you will agree with me that his is only the result of years of hard work in the restaurant industry, experience and knowledge which he is giving freely to all of us in the Canadian Restaurant Association.

"I have expressed myself to my own branch the same as I have to you now, and I have had members say to me: "Sure, but they are only doing that for selfish reasons to protect themselves" I do not believe this, but even if it is true, in helping themselves they must help all of the restaurateurs from one end of Canada to the other.

"I realize that I have not said anything in this talk that you probably have not heard and read many times before, but if I have given you a little to think about, I will have been justified in coming. I wish to thank you for being so interested while I talked about my two pets, The Canadian Restaurant Association, and the White Spot."

Unmarried Mother, Teacher Problem

COPENHAGEN, June 17—(AP) —Bishops of the Danish Church aligned themselves today with the Danish School Teachers Association in opposing continued employment of an unmarried school principal after she had borne a child.

The case is that of Miss Inger Merete Nordentoft, a Communist member of Parliament, who bore a daughter March 30. She was allowed to continue as a school principal.

Dr. Hans Fulgsang-Damgaard, primate of the Danish Church, issued a statement in behalf of the country's bishops, saying in part:

"According to the Danish school laws' clause of aims, this school is a Christian one, the ethics and morals of which are based on Christian principles. Consequently, we stand aloof on concepts contrary to the school's Christian fundamental view and destroying respect for matrimony which is the vital base for development of true, sound and happy social life."

LONDON — (CP) — Dustbins are to be inspected by Ministry of Food officers in the campaign against bread waste. Inspectors will als go into cafes and restaurants to find out if bread is being served to customers who have not asked for it.
