The Battery's "Lean" Season

Insufficient Charging and Exaggerated Demands Prevail In Cold Weather

IF A MAN SHOULD SUDDENLY be compelled to do more and harder work, when working conditions were most disadvantageous and should, at the same time have his rations cut away down, it would seem a rather "raw deal." He would soon become exhausted if he did not get sick. However, nature accords a very similar treatment to every vehicle battery when she brings on cold weather and the storms of this kind deserve special consideration to save them from their own peculiar form of debility. To follow out the analogy, winter usage implies much longer lighting hours; almost exclusively city driving, with its numerous stops and starter operations and the cold starting of cold engines and simultaneously, only a very lean ration of restorative electric juice is available, because the mileage driven is small and the speed is necessarily low in urban service. Moreover, the resistance of a cold battery is abnormally high, which means that much of the current passing through it is wasted and this applies to charging as well as discharging current. Less of the generator current is stored and less of the battery accumulated energy reaches the starter and the lights. Battery efficiency and output are also diminished by the reduction, by low temperature, of the diffusive action which brings fresh liquid into contact with the plates and of the chemical reactions upon which the battery's operation depends. The situation amounts simply to this, that more work is called for from an "under-nourished" and wasteful battery, during the cold season and it is not strange that in so many instances the battery's "totality" becomes very low. There are only two remedies for this condition, namely, to increase the charging, which the battery receives or to decrease the amount of current taken from it, and both can be practiced together with very good results. To accomplish the former, have the service station increase the generator charging rate, or drive the car a part of the time on second gear, with the engine running about as fast as it does on direct drive at normal car speed. If these expedients do not suffice, occasional charging from a rectifier in the home garage will keep the battery full.

ANNOYING ENGINE VIBRATION

C. R. C. writes: My car vibrates so badly at speeds from 25 to 30 miles per hour as to make driving very unpleasant, the vibration being noticeable as to the steering column, windshield, emergency-brake lever and gear shift. Is there anything that can be done about this?

Answer: The first thing for you to do is to find out whether other cars of the same make and model vibrate as badly as yours. If this proves to be the case, it is unlikely that there is any practical remedy, he [illegible] on being inherent in the design and construction of the engine. If, on the other hand, you find that yours vibrates worse than others, there is hope that you can secure some improvement. We assume that this vibration is from the engine and, this being the case, it is possible that its individual piston and connecting rod units are not of equal weights, that the crankshaft or flywheel is slightly out of balance, or that there is inequality of action among the cylinders. If even the radiator-fan is unbalanced it will make noticeable vibration.

NUMBER OF PISTON RINGS

M. E. S. asks: [illegible] new pistons in my engine would you recommend those having [illegible] instead of three?

Answer: You would probably find it difficult to secure such pistons and we doubt if it would be worth while. Pistons with three ring-grooves above the wrist-pin are practically standard. Many engines [illegible] groove below the pin but [illegible] coming usual to cut the upper groove [illegible] manufacturers are using [illegible] low rings side by side in one groove more of the upper grooves but the tendency is toward fewer [illegible] grooves with the [illegible] number of rings and [illegible] as good [illegible]

THIRD SPEED DISENGAGES

C. A. R. writes: The [illegible] of my [illegible] car gets [illegible] slipping out of engagement. What can you suggest as a remedy?

Answer: If very [illegible] trouble on record you [illegible] to locate the trouble. Put into third speed and [illegible] two part jaw clutch [illegible] the clutch shaft and [illegible] shaft together. [illegible] rounded off, by [illegible] ing flat, this may be [illegible] Make sure that [illegible] jaw clutch come [illegible] of not, there will be [illegible] the trouble [illegible] spring pressure [illegible] this speed in mind [illegible]

After Ten Years

BY MARION RUBINCAN

AN EXPLOSION

Chapter 37

As Humphrey had thought ruefully, the "softening" process was not yet noticeable. He remembered how sure Patty had been the night he told her their money was lost, how sure that a little misfortune would soften Millie. But as the summer days went by Millie grew only irritable to get along with, and more and more ill tempered.

"Poor Millie," Patty used to say, "it's tough on her," he would say to himself after some particularly cruel remark from her.

So many little things came up every day, little worries, little annoyances. Only the poor know the troublesomeness of petty economy. A pocketful of small change does such damage in smoothing the pathway of life.

Humphrey, clearing up all his debts, large hoped desire to "start with a clean slate", paid out [illegible] the money he collected from the sale of the house, his car and other or two other assets. The money they lived on was taken in by the business, and that was little enough.

"I go to the club today. They're having a bridge tea, only I haven't the cash to drop over in." Millie would say wistfully, at the break fast table.

"Why not, wall?" is her fortune was Humphrey's answer, in a cheerful tone of voice.

"Of course, but I'll be [illegible] when I'm down with the work. [illegible] I'm [illegible] after the money [illegible] grew [illegible] I'm [illegible] Humphrey [illegible] the [illegible] business places [illegible] Hum [illegible] Patty [illegible] the [illegible] Millie [illegible] to live near the stores because of [illegible] and growing [illegible] moved away [illegible] district, the resort [illegible] Wilkinson's "best [illegible]

[illegible] when the Bach [illegible] their house, they were in the middle of the [illegible] district. New City was near its [illegible] Millie passed several homes [illegible] envied when she walked [illegible] town to the club, then new [illegible] blocks and blocks of unfinished [illegible] and finally, when the pavement ended, she would reach the club house. A stretch of country very much like New England was beyond [illegible] then the great [illegible] with its changing lights and colors and its gigantic trees.

Millie hated walking, she [illegible] from the club and blamed Humphrey. She went only when a friend came and called for her in a car.

One day Millie went to the next town to visit an old friend. She had to put off her trip for two weeks because they were down to [illegible] little she could not pay the laundress if she bought the ticket, and when she came back, she had to walk home from the station because she hadn't the half dollar for the bus.

"Why didn't you come to the office? I'd have carried your suitcase home for you," Humphrey said in answer to her lament.

"I hate to have people see me walk, carrying a heavy bag, like a servant."

"Well, I don't see why I'm not a hand to have people see me do without things. They know I've lost a lot of money."

"But to have to walk half a mile to save half a dollar!"

"Well what of it? It didn't kill you!" Impatience brought out his petulance.

Millie was always complaining. "Poor Millie. Didn't he economize?" The magazines whose cheap fiction he liked to read, were to blame for holding him. Or when he relented into his pocket for the quarter which he meant to spent so freely, there were so few to rattle around that he stored not waste one.

When he went to Joe's for a game of pool he played with the greatest care, saying to himself enough to pay his debts. Before he had to lose a hundred, one week to make it up the next. Now he made the capital to tie up in betting, over for a week.

Jim and other of his friends used to drop around to his office in the afternoons, with several magazines under their arms, and go away mentioning that they'd read this number and might as well throw it away in his scrap basket, rather than carry it home.

Patty smiled at their awkward way of presenting him with reading matter, and liked them for their awkwardness and their thoughtfulness. For it was a day by day matter whether they could even keep the office.

"I could save a little if I came home for lunch," Humphrey said one day.

"Heavens, as though two meals looking at you wasn't enough!" Millie snapped. She had been scrubbing the porch, and Maude had come in unexpectedly and seen her. Millie was still smarting with humiliation.

Humphrey went red. His fist came down on the table with a bang.

"This has gone as far as I intend to let it!" he began.

Even Millie forgot her bad temper.

France Wants A Powerful Fleet Of Submarines

PARIS, Dec. 31—France's determination to have a powerful fleet and her objection to limitation efforts of the Washington conference were vigorously voiced in the senate today during a discussion of the navy ministry's budget.

Senator Henry Berenger, who reported the marine budget, said France was at a decisive turning point.

"Is France still independent in her navy or, in her army?" he was asked.

"Has the old principle of sovereignty been sacrificed, somewhat in those conferences wherein we have been promised a sort of international happiness?"

Senator De Kerguezec defended the submarine as an essential weapon of defense, but wished it to be continued for military uses instead of being applied to torpedoing commerce.

Senator Berenger severely criticized the condition of the navy and other senators joined with him in urging speedy reforms. Senator Peronnet described the central naval administration as being "in a state of what I term arterio sclerosis."

Preceding the debate over the naval budget the naval commission had published a resolution urging the minister of marine to increase the number of submarines so as to adequately defend the coastline in view of the present weakness of the navy, which was expressed during the discussion in the senate.

The concluding paragraph of the naval committee's resolution was as follows:

"One cannot conceive, therefore that France's efforts in this direction should be obstructed or limited. It is a question of national independence and of the right of legitimate defence that is at stake."

The resolution was adopted in connection with the naval commission's report on its programme, based on two principles; that the French navy must always be superior to the German navy and sufficiently supreme in the Mediterranean to safeguard French interests in North Africa and the Near East.

The naval commission's report credits France with having forty nine submarines of which fifteen it is declared, will be obsolete by 1925. These are to be replaced only by twelve provided in the present programme. Although twenty four others are scheduled for the indefinite future. The commission suggests two groups of undersea craft, one to be composed of short range and the other of a long range of submarines, the latter being for "pursuit of enemy commerce; pursuit of pirates and of light enemy cruisers."

A TRIBUTE

The following letter was received by a friend of the late Sgt. Air Mechanic. B. MacLeod, who was accidently killed at Camp Borden, Ontario, Nov. 21st, 1921 and this friend takes great pleasure in publishing it with the hope that it may be a comfort to all his loved ones who may read it. The letter is from his chum in Camp Borden:

Dear, I am taking this opportunity of writing you a few lines and on behalf of the rest of the boys and myself who wish to extend our heartfelt sympathy to you in the loss of your dear friend. I knew "Mac" for a period of some little more than three months and I am more than pleased to say that we became good friends almost immediately and I have no hesitancy in saying that he was exceptionally well liked by all whom he came in contact with and his untimely death was a great blow to us all. All the officers and men of Camp Borden deeply regret the loss of 2nd. Air Mechanic B. MacLeod. His death was instantaneous and he never suffered. I might further state that "Ben" was an extremely religious young man and had not a single enemy in this camp. He was always cheerful and had a pleasant smile for everyone and we will always miss his smiling face!

With deep sympathy

Very sincerely yours

TRY MAGNESIA FOR STOMACH TROUBLE

It Neutralizes Stomach Acidity, Prevents Food Fermentation, Sour Gassy Stomach and Acid Indigestion

Doubtless if you are a sufferer from indigestion, you have already tried pepsin pancreatin, charcoal, drugs and various digestive aids and you know these things will now cure your trouble in some cases do not even give relief.

But before giving up hope and decaying you are a chronic dyspeptic just try the effect of a little Bisurated Magnesia—not the ordinary commercial carbonate, citrate or milk but the pure Bisurated Magnesia which you can obtain from practically any druggist in either powdered or tablet form.

Take a teaspoonful of the powder or two compressed tablets with a little water after your next meal, and see what a difference this makes. It will instantly neutralize the dangerous, harmful acid in the stomach which now causes your food to ferment and sour, making gas, wind flatulence, heartburn and the bloated or heavy, limpy feeling that seems to follow most everything you eat.

You will find that provided you take a little Bisurated Magnesia immediately after a meal, you can you can eat anything and enjoy it without any danger of pain or discomfort to follow and moreover, the continued use of the Bisurated magnesia cannot injure the stomach in any way so long as there are any symptoms of acid indigestion.

Gets 40 Years For Window Washing

PARRY SOUND, Ont., Dec. 31—Hungry and cold and out of a job Stephen Sowosiuk, a Galician decided to smash a few windows in order to earn a term in a nice and warm jail for the winter. That was his explanation to the court yesterday of his assault on a store front with an iron bar in the early hours of last Wednesday morning when 21 plate glass panes fell before his trusty weapon.

Police magistrate George Mountsentenced him to four years in the penitentiary on each of the ten charges, the sentences to run consecutively, and making a total of forty years.

Dr. Limbert, the jail surgeon, says the man is sane and entirely responsible for his acts, although of a low type of mentality.

TORONTO, Dec. 31—Hon. W. E. Raney, attorney general of Ontario when the facts were brought to his attention last night said that the length of the sentence for such an offence as window smashing appeared to be an extraordinary one. He added that it was his intention to have his department investigate the matter.

Will Proceed To Turn Swords Into Plowshares

PARIS, Dec. 31—The Allied Council of Ambassadors has decided to place in the hands of General Nollet, head of the Disarmament Commission, the task of recovering the Deutsche Werke, the greatest of the plants used during the war for the manufacture of German armaments, into work shops for the manufacture of industrial machinery.

The plan of conversion will call for the employment of twenty thousand workers who were employed in the manufacture of war material.

The plants in question are at Munich, Cassel, Amburg, Dachau, Spandau; Hanau; Ingolstadt; Lippstadt and the former naval torpedo yards, at Frederickshort, in the Baltic Sea.

Paris Sentenced To Be Hanged March 30th

ST. JOHN, N. B., Dec. 31—"You are sentenced to be hanged by the neck until you are dead, within the confines of the county jail in this city and county of St. John on Thursday March 30th, 1922 and may God in His infinite pity have mercy on your soul."

These were the words which greeted John Paris when he stood up this afternoon shortly after 5 o'clock before Judge W. B. Chandler to receive his sentence for the murder of little Sadie Macaulay on the wooded slope leading down to Marble Cove on Tuesday, August 2.

He was convicted of that revolting crime on Dec. 2nd at his second trial after a session which lasted for ten days. The jury at the first trial disagreed but stood seven to five in favor of conviction. The time when Paris was to be sentenced had not been made public and the first intimation given that he was to receive his sentence this afternoon was his appearance there at the conclusion of another case. W. M. Ryan moved on behalf of the Crown that Paris receive his sentence.

Judge Chandler then ordered Paris to stand up and asked him if there was any reason why sentence should not be passed on him. Paris replied: "Your Honor I don't see why sentence shouldn't be passed upon the man who committed the crime but not upon me as I am innocent of the crime of murdering Sadie Macaulay."

Following this declaration the judge imposed the death penalty on the prisoner. Paris received the sentence without displaying a single sign of emotion although he listened attentively to the judge with his head canted a little to one side. His Honor told Paris that he had been given a fair trial and that he had been well defended but since he had been convicted it devolved on the presiding judge to impose the sentence.

After imposing sentence on the prisoner, the judge urged Paris in the meantime to make his peace with his God and prepare himself for the day when he must meet His Maker.

The Egyptian Unrest

LONDON, Dec. 31—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Cairo says that at a meeting of the Egyptian doctors held on Tuesday, a resolution was passed calling for a boycott of the British and the fostering of the idea among all classes of the people that the boycott is a sacred national duty. The doctors also decided to withdraw their deposits from British banks and to recommend that Egyptians generally follow their example.

The dispatch adds that the military authorities having ordered the banks not to pay without special permission, certain persons including Sad Zaghlul Pasha and other banished Egyptians have become alarmed and are beginning to withdraw their deposits.
