Defeat.

In Cupid's war, before black eyes and brown
My stubborn heart would lay no weapon down;
But now, before two conquering eyes of blue,
My heart, defeated, owns its Waterloo.

—Clinton Scollard, in March Lippincott's.

A Confidence.

One night, not many months ago, two men met at the door of a metropolitan newspaper office. One was coming out, the other was going in. They recognized each other with some difficulty, so slight was their acquaintance, exchanged salutations, and then, upon the incomer's informing the outgoer that the purpose of his call was a visit to him, passed up the street in earnest conversation. One might not have known that one of the pair was an editor, but he never would have missed naming the other as an ecclesiastic. For two squares they strolled, the churchman doing most of the talking, the newsman listening and throwing in an occasional word. Then, when their ways parted, they stopped, and the listener took the part of orator. "I will tell you frankly, doctor," he said, "that there is not a newspaper in this country that would not gladly print every word that you propose to say, and not a single one of them would give you the slightest editorial support. You would be just as liable to church discipline as if you had said it to your bishop in convocation."

"I will think it over," said the divine; and the two parted.

This was, I think, the most remarkable case of confidence in my observation. The ecclesiastic was rector of one of the largest and oldest parishes in the East. He had seen the newspaper man but twice before; yet he put before him a most tempting morceau in the way of a "religious sensation," and parted from him on a street corner without even the perfunctory enjoinder to secrecy which men lay in imparting the most trivial bit of gossip whose paternity they do not care to own. Of course the question of conscience entered largely into this case. The newspaper man knew by reputation and admired the clergyman, and did not care to see his useful future sacrificed for a newspaper "scoop."—From "The Newspaper Man as a Confident," by A. E. Watrous, in March Lippincott's.

WITH GLOVES ON.

PHOSPHOLEINE
(Pronounced FOS-FO-LEEN),
when they became smooth and soft.

SCROFULA AND SALT RHEUM.

Dear Mr. Eagar,

I have much pleasure in giving you a record of the effect produced by the use of your PHOSPHOLEINE. The following cases have come under my particular attention while visiting the sick and poor: A case of Hereditary Scrofula.—The patient had tried most of the blood purifying remedies and Sarsaparillas in use, but for the past 19 years obtained no relief. After taking three bottles of your PHOSPHOLEINE his flesh became smooth and healthy, and he is now completely cured. A case of severe cough in the last stages of Consumption: The cough was eased, and the patient regained flesh and strength. This case is past curing, and the patient was pronounced so by physicians; but had she obtained of your medicine sooner, would no doubt have been cured. A case in which patient had given up the use of alcohol: The craving was cured, and the patient was regaining health and strength. A case of loss of flesh, great weakness, and indisposition for exertion of any kind, has been restored to health and strength by using your PHOSPHOLEINE. I have also recommended it to many who have been suffering from Dyspepsia, loss of strength and flesh, and in every case it has effected a cure. I have derived much benefit from the use of it myself. I remain yours, &c.,

GENTLEMEN,—I have purposely delayed writing you, as I wished to give a thoroughly complete trial to the M. P. P.
