HOW PARTIES STAND COMMITTED.

It is interesting to note that both Premier Haszard and Mr. Mathieson with their respective parties stand committed to important measures in common and that in support of these we ought to count upon the united efforts of the newly elected Legislature. These measures include the following:

Pressing the claims against the federal Government.

Consolidating and funding the public debt.

Improving the educational system

The furtherance of the Tunnel project,

More equitable transportation rates.

The restoration of our original representation in the Commons.

Here are six important planks as to the underlying principles of which the two parties are mainly agreed. It is most earnestly to be desired that so far as these measures are concerned the two parties may be able to act together, not only because of the importance of the issues at stake, but because concerted action would be stronger and more likely to be effective than would the action of one party alone.

The Government as well as the Opposition should take note of some things that were demonstrated as the result of the election campaign. One of these is that a large portion of the people of the Province are not quite satisfied with the subsidy settlement and many good Liberals are far from being enthusiastic over it. Another is that the advocacy of the ballot in elections was distinctly popular, and not less so was the call for placing the Provincial Auditor in a position independent of Government control. The present system of public accounting has not been satisfactory under either party.

The Liberal party is continued in power by the voice of a majority of people, but the people will continue to expect of them in the future the adoption of useful and progressive measures. The ballot and the independence of the Auditor ought not to be party questions at all, any more than those mentioned in the first part of this article upon which both parties are agreed. The Guardian would be pleased to see both parties in the Legislature working heartily together, not only in the furtherance of our just claims, but also in rendering our provincial institutions more complete and useful along the lines above indicated.

As to our claims against the federal Government there is something more outlined in the Opposition platform than in the Government in one or two respects, but these are claims in regard to which both parties might easily unite. We refer first to the claim that the Province should be repaid the cost incurred in constructing the Island Railway. The Island is clearly as much entitled to this as were New Brunswick and Nova Scotia for the pre-confederation expenditure on Government railways in those Provinces. And we are clearly entitled to compensation in some way for the immense tracts of the public domain that are being transferred to Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba.

These are simple questions of undoubted provincial right. They are in no proper sense of the word party-political questions at all, and can only be made such at the expense of dividing our forces and perhaps defeating our just claims. Let the Government and Opposition patriotically unite to further what are obviously our fair claims in these matters. Of course, if one party or the other should should refuse to recognise any one of our claims as just that would be an end to it, and the other party and the country at large would have just ground of complaint but we think much could be accomplished for good, and more effectively than in any other way, if both parties would agree to work together on all those larger questions which are not necessarily party-political. There will be room enough for party warfare along other lines.

THE HAZEN GOVERNMENT IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

From this distance it looks as if the Government led by Hon. J. D. Hazen in New Brunswick is beset with more or less serious difficulties at the present time and these are in part the result of a condition under which the Government gained power, that is, not so much on its own merits as on the demerits of the older Government, somewhat after the manner of the Mackenzie Government at Ottawa in 1873. Both began with sweeping majorities.

In politics as in nature a phenomenally high tide is usually followed by an equally remarkable low one. Violent action is followed by equally violent reaction. The Tweedie-Pugsley Government was greatly discredited throughout the Province before the change that brought in Premier Robinson, more so in fact than either party was quite aware of. Mr. Robinson, himself a capable, clean and popular leader, suffered for the sins of his predecessors, rather than his own in the election of March last. Mr. Hazen found himself suddenly and unexpectedly called to power with three fourths of the Legislature at his back and containing much crude material along with some strong men.

He had an embarrassment of riches in the number of his supporters, but they were not a very coherent or homogeneous body. Not all were Conservatives, and this made trouble in matters of patronage in the first place and tended to greater trouble when the federal elections came on in October. Into the latter Mr. Hazen threw himself with more zeal and energy than was discreet for a leader a portion of whose support was made up of former Liberals who had grown disaffected toward their party. This was accentuated by his personal warfare against Mr. Pugsley, the Minister of Public Works, and by two of his (Mr. Hazen's) supporters, in Carleton and Northumberland, resigning their seats to contest the federal elections.

The Liberal sweep of eleven to two in the federal election of October in New Brunswick, taken along with the defeat of Mr. Hazen's supporters in the two counties referred to, the election of Col. McLean, the Liberal standard-bearer in Hr. Hazen's home constituency of Sunbury and the election of Hon. Dr. Pugsley in Saint John, were severe rebuffs for Mr. Hazen. To the popular mind these were a reversal of the Conservative victory in the provincial election of seven months before. In brief Mr. Hazen gained power under conditions which made a strong reaction inevitable, and he and his followers by an ill-advised course did something to hasten and strengthen it.

But the stars in their courses have also fought against Mr. Hazen. When he gained office it was with the powerful assistance of two newspapers that have since turned their forces against him, apparently because of a change of ownership. Of five daily newspapers published in St. John and all circulating widely, Mr. Hazen has not a single one supporting him or his Government. It is perilous to have so many batteries volleying and thundering against him and not a gun replying. To leave his Government without press support in a populous, wealthy and intellectual centre like St. John is to court almost certain defeat at the end of the Legislative term and to suffer inevitable losses in the meantime.

Just now there are two by-elections pending under conditions such as we have stated. How they may go we know not, but Mr. Hazen's candidates are contesting them at great disadvantage against very strenuous and confident opposition. Should he lose one or both of these, his majority in the House would still be ample, but the moral effect would be weakening. To give a fair fighting chance a strong Conservative newspaper must be founded or purchased in St. John before the now apparent reaction has got wholly beyond control. Mr. Hazen has good abilities and reputation, and he has some capable colleagues. His government might yet make a good showing in a progressive and constructive way, if given a fair chance before the country, which just now it is not getting.

It is remarkable that while prohibition sentiment in both New Brunswick and Nova Scotia is apparently very strong, there is not a daily newspaper in either of those Provinces that is squarely committed to the abolition of the liquor traffic. The Guardian has demonstrated that the frank advocacy of prohibition is not only not unpopular but commends itself to the better elements of our citizenship. No newspaper in this Province now carries a liquor advertisement. There is clearly both need and room for prohibition dailies in both St John and Halifax.

If half that The Sun, The Globe and The Telegraph and Times have in the past said about Hon. Dr. Pugsley was true, (we are not saying it was) he ought not to remain in public life. But they were not all saying evil things at the same time and they have all become unanimous in his praise and defence. The Minister of Public Works, whatever his faults may have been is a man of ability and resources, an industrious and influential worker for his constituency and is supported by the press of the chief city of his Province more heartily and unitedly than any other of the Ministers of Sir Wilfrid's cabinet. And when the St. John dailies all agree their unanimity is something wonderful.
