Let's say you become declarer at four spades with the South hand. West opens the ace of diamonds and continues with a diamond, which you ruff.

You then play the ten of spades which West ducks, and next the jack which West takes with the ace. He leads a heart to his partner's ace, and East then plays the king of diamonds.

It doesn't matter whether you ruff high or low—in either case, West is bound to make his nine of spades and down you go.

That's the story of the hand, if you played it that way, but naturally there's more to it than that. What we'd like to know is whether you can figure out a way to make the hand (you can), now that you know exactly how the East - West cards are divided.

Just as in most double - dummy problems, the solution isn't difficult once you've seen it. If you'd like to work out the answer for yourself, stop reading right here; otherwise, here it is:

The whole point is that you have to do something to prevent the defense from creating the overruff position in diamonds late in the play. Therefore, assuming that the first two leads are the ace and another diamond, you ruff the second one and play a club and trump it in dummy.

Now you lead the third round of diamonds, East playing the king, and on it you discard the two of hearts. That gives the defense its second trick, but the only other trick they can get after that is the ace of spades. East is out of diamonds and unable to make a return that will embarrass you in any way.

The purpose behind these plays was to remove a threatening card (the king of diamonds) from East's hand and at the same time discard a heart which had to be lost in any case.

It is not important that you wind up losing two diamond tricks instead of a heart and a diamond—what is important is that you lose only one trump trick instead of two.

Yesterday's Answer

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X E
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
