Gloom

Of ill health, despondency and despair, gives way to the sunshine of hope, happiness and health, upon taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, because it gives renewed life and vitality to the blood, and through that imparts nerve strength, vigor and energy to the whole body. Read this letter: "Hood's Sarsaparilla helped me wonderfully, changed sickness to health, gloom to sunshine. No pen can describe what I suffered. I was deathly sick, had sick headaches every few days and those terrible tired, despondent feelings, with heart troubles so that I could not go up and

There is no pleasure in life if deprived of health, for life becomes a burden. Hood's Sarsaparilla does far more than advertised. After taking one bottle, it is sufficient to recommend itself." MRS. SANTA CLAUS IS REAL.

Though Many People Speak of Him as a Myth.

In spite of the fact that Dec. 6 was St. Nicholas' day thousands of people talk of Santa Claus as a myth. St. Nicholas was a very real personage. He was Archbishop of Myra in 342, and the name under which he enjoys an annual popularity in this country is the German form that came with the German custom of the Christmas tree and all the rest of it.

St. Nicholas is a great saint with all the Teutonic and Scandinavian peoples. As a matter of course he soon became famous in working miracles and here again he appeared to seek favor with the young people.

An innkeeper having killed two young gentlemen and put them in the pickle tub, intending to sell them as pickled pork, the saint, who, in a vision, had seen the deed done, declared he would put a stop to the business, and thereupon he transformed himself from Lycia to Athens and stood before the astonished innkeeper and said, "What has thou done?"

The man trembled, confessed and implored forgiveness. Having patted the man on the back and said, "Don't do it any more," the holy man turned to the pickle tub, when the imitation sides, legs and hands of pork began to stir, and in quick sticks there came forth not two boys, merely, but three, as may be proved by reference to the Salisbury missal of 1534, wherein there is a picture of the event, and one of its peculiarities is that, as the three boys rise complete out of the pickle, the barbarous butcher is still busy in cutting one of them up.

The guardianship of the young by Santa Claus was of old recognized in England by the custom of choir boys in cathedrals choosing a boy bishop on the day of St. Nicholas, Dec. 6. This was a very important event, as may be seen by Hone's "Every Day Book," I., 1559, where there is an effigy of a boy bishop from Salisbury cathedral. The custom was in full observance from early times until 1542, when it was abolished by a proclamation of Henry VIII.

We have simply incorporated St. Nicholas' day with Christmas day and made the night of Dec. 24 the time of the saint's visitation. But he is not a myth now any more than he ever was. He is a very real as well as a very good saint indeed, and for the children's sake, may his shadow never grow less!

NORMAN CHRISTMAS.

CUTSOMS AND FEASTS OF ENGLAND'S ANCIENT RULERS.

Celts and Saxons Were the Servants of Their Conquerors--Stewed Lampreys From the Severn—Drinks of the Early Britons.

CELTIC sperstitions and traditions prevail in England, the land of the mistletoe; the romance of Arthur and his knights lingers around Avalon; Roman luxury is with us in Bath and Cirencester; Somerset recalls the scenes of Athelney and Glastonbury, and in the magnificent piles of Worcester, Gloucester and Hereford we still gaze in admiration on these wonders of Norman generosity.

But what have these Normans bequeathed to us of Christmas customs? Nothing distinctive, for their ancestors, the sea kings, were but offshoots of the same Scandanavian forefathers of the Saxons, and thus we had already received through Dane and Saxon the observances of northern Yule. But a greater luxury and love of display in every form entered English life. Quality, no longer quantity, was the fashion of the board. The ox and calf flesh, sheep and swine flesh appear as beef, veal, mutton and pork; huge horns of home-brewed ale give place to wines; spiced and highly seasoned dishes first appear. But at heart the Norman is no more refined than the Saxon. Where the Saxon is simple-minded, trustworthy and faithful, the Norman is crafty, cunning and deceitful. His fair words may sound sweeter, 'tis all.

Many and varied now are the dishes at feasts. Our terrapin and canvasback duck had their prototype in the crane, indispensable at all aristocratic feasts, and in Becket's days, for King Henry was a veritable gormand, we find such dishes as 'dillegrout," "karumple" and "maupigyrnun."

Dillegrout required great skill on the cook's part, for it was composed of almond milk, the brawn of capons, sugar and spices, chicken parboiled and chopped and is often known as "le messe de gryron." If fat were added to it, then it became "maupigyrnun."

The tenant of the manor of Addington in Surrey held his lands in return for a mess of dillegrout on the day of the King's coronation.

The Norman Kings had learned to appreciate the stewed lampreys of the Severn, and the loyalty of Gloucester was tested every year by the preparation of a huge lamprey pie for the sovereign.

So fond was Henry II. of this rich dish that his gluttony overcame his prudence, and his last illness and death resulted from the same. John, too, fined the citizens of Gloucester for not sending him their usual tribute. But when lampreys cost 50 cents apiece, and a whole sheep's carcass could be bought for the same sum, need we wonder at the economical tendencies displayed toward the worthless king?

The Christmas lamprey pie, which Gloucester sends to the reigning King or Queen is well worth notice. Last year the custom, fallen into abeyance, was revived, and a pie weighing 31 pounds was despatched to Windsor and gratefully acknowledged by Her Majesty. According to an ancient recipe, "take out ye backbone, season ym with cloves, mace, nutmeg, pepper and allspice, stew ym in beef gravy, port wine and wine of Maderia, put ym in a pie, with chopped anchovies, flour and butter; eat yt with lemon juice, mustard and horse radish."

Accompanying this dish are silver skewers bearing the city arms, engraved or raised in relief. The English had long ere this time been celebrated for their drinking capabilities.

Iago says, "Your Dane, your German and your swag-bellied Hollander are nothing to your English."

The mead, sider, ale, pigment and morat of the Celts and Saxons have Norman successors in claret or clarre, garhiofilac and hippocras. The Saxon morat was made of honey and mulberries, and the Norman hippocras, indispensable at all high feasts, was sweetened wine mixed with spices. The garhiofilac was a white wine spiced with girofle or cloves, and we can still read an order of Henry III. directing the keeper of his wines to get ready for Christmas two tuns of white wine to make garhiofilac and one tun of red wine for claret.

The same King gives orders for peacocks and boars' heads for the feast, showing how luxury was creeping in more and more. It was this King whose coronation at Gloucester is depicted in one of the cathedral windows. In a notable Christmas spent there in 1234 nearly all his nobles left him because he had given the best seats at table to foreigners.

But we must never forget that until Crecy was fought and won in 1346 there was no English Christmas. Previous to this Saxon and Norman dwelt apart as servant and master, the Saxon clinging to his simpler if coarser mode of life. The Norman sat scornful and aloof in his ceremonious feasts. But the leaven was none the less working, and each successive generation of the two races became more and more cognizant of the other's doings. The Saxon dwelling as servant in the Norman's halls must conform in part to the ways of the household, and the Norman child devoted to his faithful Saxon servant listened with eager ears to the tales of Arthur and his knights, for the Saxon and Celt had long ere this made common cause.

We have no tale of the reverence of the cross to tell in the observance of a Norman Christmas, and yet the wars of the cross drew Saxon and Norman closer and closer, until in the time of Edward III. they made common cause and fought bravely side by side, the Saxon full of admiration for the skill which could conquer brute force, and the Norman no longer disdainful, for he finds the Saxon yeoman a trusty friend, a faithful subject and a worthy ally. And so we come to the England of Chaucer, the father, the wellspring, the bright and morning star of our language—the richest, the greatest and most comprehensive of the languages of the world. Let us join him in "Nowell crieth every lustie man."

THE PROVINCIAL SITUATION.

SIR,—The grave fact that we, in this Province, are face to face with the problem of how we are to avert the inevitable financial bankruptcy and ruin towards which we have been drifting for the last five years, is patent to every one that devotes the least attention to public matters. Judging by the past is the only basis upon which to calculate for the future, and presuming that the Peters administration should exist for 20 years more until their debentures become redeemable, and the yearly deficits are the same as in the last five years—and there is no reasonable prospect of their becoming less,—what will the result be? The average deficits under Mr. Peters for the past five years has been $48,359.91. In twenty years time, or in A. D. 1916, the public debt from this source will have increased to $1,205,747.75, from the time of their accent to power, and if it now requires in the neighborhood of $20,000 to pay the interest on our indebtedness, it will then require $58,587.00 to pay the yearly interest on our public debt. More than the whole proceeds of their famous Tax Act! Anyone viewing this outlook must come to the conclusion that financial ruin is staring us in the face if the present state of matters is allowed to continue. But I do not anticipate that such will be the case. The people are only waiting an opportunity to hurl from power the horde of incapables, and the General Election of 1897 will chronicle the downfall of the worst government that ever disgraced the annals of our sea girt isle.

But it is one thing to discover and point out errors and evils, political and otherwise, and quits another thing to propose and provide a remedy. We have heard from Queen's County on this matter through the timely and well-written letters of Mr. Stewart and also from the thirteen propositions of THE EXAMINER. We have also heard from King's County through the communication from Mr. Shaw published in THE EXAMINER. Yes, and we have heard also from J. H. Bell, M. L. A., who has heretofore prided himself on being a member of Mr. Peter's working majority, and who voted for many, if not all, of Peter's obnoxious measures. Finding that the festering corruption of the administration with which he was identified had become offensive in the nostrils of the electorate he acted the part of the rat who finding the ship sinking forsook it to save his own political life. He came out at the late bye-election in the Fourth District of this county as an Independent Liberal. But Mr. Bell, or no other member of that faction, need depend on the gullability of us rustic taxpayers and electors. Although we are sometimes imposed on by designing lawyers and politicians who make promises that they never intend to fulfill, yet we know enough to hold every individual member who supports and has supported the present government responsible to the country for the acts of that Government. It is too late for Mr. Bell to wash his hands, pilate like, and say he is clear of such responsibility.

Again, there is no room in a small Province like this for a third party. The electors must be either Conservative or Liberal. This was plainly demonstrated in the contest in the Fourth District, when the nominee of the Patrons of Industry—a party having no political sins to answer for—was told by the electors that there was no need of him.

But as regards a remedy for existing evils, it is in order that Prince County should also be heard from. I would humbly suggest that the incoming Conservative Government return to the sound and economical policy of the Sullivan-Ferguson administration, and retain the taxes in moderation to meet the deficits; and thus make revenue and expenditure meet,—adopting all means of practical retrenchment and economy, taking advantage of the steps taken by the present Government in the way of economical reform; for we must give them credit where credit is due,—notably for the money saved in the amalgamation of the two branches of the Legislature, the saving effected in the administration of justice, especially as refers to trial of civil cases by jury.

Mr. Peters has shown a desire for economy in his parsimonious and tardy payment for work done in the public service, approaching in some cases very near to actual dishonesty. For instance, the withholding, for three years in succession, the hard earned salary of the Matron of the Prince County Jail, simply because her husband was blamed for being a Tory.

In view of the whole situation, I agree with you that it is desirable that the country should wake up and call meetings, appoint delegates to meet in conference, and discuss freely the best line of policy to pursue in order to redress existing evils.

Yours truly,

ELECTOR.

Summerside, Prince Co., Dec. 15, 1896.

ROSENEATH LODGE, I. O. G. T.

During a recent meeting of Roseneath Lodge of I. O. G. T., held in their newly fitted Lodge Room, the following resolutions were moved and unanimously adopted:—

Whereas, the domineering, obnoxious and peremptory manner in which the Trustees of the Roseneath School ordered this Lodge to quit holding its meetings in the Schoolroom show a spirit of antagonism exceedingly liable to excite bad feelings,—

Therefore be it Resolved, that this Lodge, though not in any way injured by their action, deplores such conduct on the part of the Trustees of this district, as calculated to create strife and to mar that harmony and good feeling which, in recent years, has existed between all classes and denominations in this district.

And Resolved, that this Lodge trusts that the affairs of this district may, in the future, be placed in the hands of men possessing moderation, justice and discretion.

Whereas, Mr. Dougald Munn, of Roseneath Mills has kindly placed at our disposal a comfortable and convenient lodge rooms,—

"Therefore be it resolved that the thanks of this lodge are due and hereby tendered Mr. Munn for this very great favor received at his hands:

"Resolved, that our thanks are especially due Mrs. Munn for much sympathy and material aid to this lodge during our recent annoyance; and further resolved that, while tendering Mr. and Mrs Munn our sincere thanks we extend to them a cordial invitation to become members of the Roseneath Lodge; and that these resolutions be sent to the press for publication."
