CONFEDERATION LIFE INSURANCE.

ANNUAL MEETING Ladies' Aid Prince Edward Island Hospital, Cundall Home, Monday. 5-1-1i.

THE ROGERS HARDWARE Company, Limited, are unloading today a Car of Lump Lime. 5-1-1i.

IMPERIAL SERVICE STATION will be the only Service Station open this afternoon. 5-1-1i.

VISITING HALIFAX — Mr. Wendall McKenna, Emerald, has returned to his home after visiting his daughter, Sister Francis Patrick, Dartmouth and other relatives in Halifax. He was accompanied by his daughter Elizabeth.

AIR CADET INSPECTION—The Charlottetown Air Cadets will be inspected on Thursday evening at 7.30 at Victoria Park if the weather proves favorable, and otherwise at the Armouries or P. W. C. hall. Group Captain Alexander Lewis, former commanding officer of the R. C. A. F. Station at Summerside, will be the inspecting officer. Parents and the public generally are invited to attend and show their appreciation in the work which the Corps is accomplishing.

WOOD ISLAND-CARIBOU SERVICE DELAYED — Owing to the condition of the road between Millview and Wood Islands, it is impossible for bus and taxi service to make connection with the Northumberland Ferries wharf at Wood Islands. Consequently the ferry service will not be resumed until further notice. Hon. Mr. Barbour Minister of Public Works, states that it would not be possible to begin repairs until the road has sufficiently dried to bear the weight of road machinery, and promises to attend to the matter as soon as conditions will permit.

CHURCH EXTENDS WELCOME —On Wednesday evening, April 10, the congregation of St. James United Church, Souris, tendered a public reception and welcome to these of its members and adherents in the Navy, Army, Air force and auxiliary services who have returned to their homes in Souris. A severe spring storm restricted the attendance somewhat but a goodly number gathered in the church hall where the program under the chairman ship of Major J.F. Sterns, M.C., senior elder of the church, was very efficiently carried out. It included an address by the pastor, Rev. W. A. MacQuarrie, B.D., and the observance of two minutes silence in memory of those who made the supreme sacrifice. A variety of amusing games and contests which followed made the evening a most enjoyable one for the returned personnel and their friends who were later served with a delicious luncheon by the sponsors of the reception, the Ladies Guild, assisted by the Ladies Aid Society. A hearty sing song brought the memorable evening to a close.

NO MORE GOOD-BYES

where there's quite a lot of traffic. Sometimes I long for Broadhurst again."

"Yes, darling" Lydia's face was bright with the effort to understand and sympathize. "I know you always had a weakness for Broadhurst. So different from me—"

"I must go back there," Susan said dreamily. "Just once. Just once for the day." The idea, abruptly springing up in her mind, took shape rapidly. Her face flushed and she felt exhilarated suddely excited. "It only takes a little over two hours from Waterloo. I could easily manage it."

"Yes, Susie," Lydia sat on the edge of her chair like a schoolgirl, one eye on the clock. "What a good idea, darling. You might see some of your old friends again."

"And the forest," Susan said. "I did so love the forest."

"What hapoened to that young farmer?" Lydia asked vaguely. "Didn't we have a young farmer from Broadhurst to lunch once in the old flat?"

"Oh, yes," said Susan expressionlessly. "You mean Terence Blackburne. Didn't you know—he married Nancy Bennett."

"Oh, really," Lydia looked up brightly but she was no longer listening. The clock struck four and immediately afterwards there was the shrill ring of a bell. The door opened and Dwight Sanderson was announced.

LYDIA ENGAGED

Susan's first impression of Dwight Sanderson was that he was very large. He was certainly tall enough, well over six feet, with a figure correspondingly broad, and clothes which—baggy and badly fitting—seemed to add to his size and girth.

He advanced eagerly towards them grinning expansively, filling the room. He had a good-natured, rubiucund face, Susan noticed, twinkling blue eyes, and an enormous mouth. The likeness to Raymond Massey, the film star, existed, she decided, almost entirely in her mother's imagination. Perhaps it was the mouth. Anyway, he looked pleasant enough, and kind. She felt that she could like him.

"So your little mother has told you," he said eagerly, "that she and are going to be married. I want to be married right now, but she insists on putting it off a few weeks." He looked at Lydia teasingly. "How long did you say we must wait honey?"

"Four weeks," said Lydia. She gave little affected touches to her carefully-set golden hair, and her bracelets jingled. "At least four weeks. Why, Dwight, I've got to get all my trousseau ready. I haven't a rag to stand up in You know what a lot there is to do."

"Sure I know," said Dwight good-naturedly. He ate a good tea and, when he had finished took his pipe and a large hogskin tobacco-pouch frim his pocket. "Do you girls mind if I smoke?"

"Not at all," said Susan politely. "Of course not, darling," gushed Lydia.

Susan, looked at the clock, felt the moment had arrived for her to leave. She would have to get a bus to Waterloo, and then there was the slow journey down to Ockford, stopping at every station.

Her mother and Dwight Sanderson came with her to the front door. They were kindness itself, but she knew that they did not really want her. Their happiness isolated them, shutting out the rest of the world.

"Come up again whenever you can, darling," Lydia said. "While we're away on our honeymoon you might bring Gillian up and stay in the flat. I could leave Florence. Wouldn't it be a change for you?"

"Oh, thank you, Mummy," Susan said. "I must think over that. It sounds a marvellous idea."

"Good-bye, darling."

"I am happy," said Dwight, "to have met my new daughter."

Susan turned away with last farewells. As she went along the passage the door of the flat closed behind her. She was astonished to find the tears starting to her eyes and she felt suddenly forlorn.

FOR ASPIRING JOURNALIST

Asked to give some of his many B.B.C. overseas listeners—in this instance, listeners in West Africa—an idea of "what it means to be a journalist," Wickham Steed drew on his own early experience, more than 50 years ago. He had learned shorthand, he said, and thought he could write pretty well, and he reported speeches and meetings. But still he didn't quite know how to "join the press." So he went to see one of the most prominent figures in contemporary British journalism, the late W. T. Stead. Stead had made a name for himself as editor of the Pall Mall Gazette and was then editing The Review of Reviews. Stead was a kindhearted man at bottom, but he seemed very fierce to Wickham Steed at the time. His advice was brief: "If you've got anything to say, write it down. When you have written it down, imagine that you have to cable it to Australia at your own expense—the rate is $d a word. Cut out everything that is not worth $d a word. In this way all your fine phrases will disappear. If anything remains, send it to an editor." Steed says it took him quite a time to understand how good Stead's advice was.

HALF-HAT IS STILL THE TOP FAVORITE OF YOUTH

NEW YORK —The half-hat designed originally by Sally Victor is still the young girl's favorite. The skull cap, or hood, by John Frederics, continues important even for the spring when shown in soft felt, satin or woven straw, and the bicycle clip, first initiated by Lilly Dache, is now an indispensable in the young girl's wardrobe. These are the hats that will dress-up the suits and dresses worn in the Easter parade—they are the little hats easy to wear and flattering.
