PLAN OF THE BATTLE OF PAARDEBERG.

The above is a facsimile of a drawing by Private Joseph Hudon, Royal Canadian Regiment, of the battle of Paardeberg, which resulted in the corralling of General Cronje's army on Tuesday, Feb. 18. The Canadians were, as will be seen stationed at the beginning of the battle behind the British guns on the south side of the river and not far from Lord Roberts's headquarters.

From that position, early in the morning, they were, with the Cornwalls, marched across to the north side of the Modder river by the route shown on the plan to storm the main laager of the Boers, which was just below the edge of the north bank of the river, here thirty or forty feet above the level of the river bed. It was while advancing to take up this second position that so many of the Canadians fell, killed or wounded. The Canadian regiment, throwing themselves flat on the ground, held the position marked 'second position' throughout the whole day (Sunday.) It was while in the firing line near the left of this position, marked with a cross, that Private Hudon was first wounded. He received his second wound at the point marked by the second cross, apparently while making his way back from the firing line to the Canadian hospital near the ford. This interesting map shows the position of the Boers and the positions of all the British troops and guns engaged in the battle, as well as Lord Roberts's headquarters. The Canadians were the heroes of Paardeberg.

CRONJE'S SURRENDER TO ROBERTS.

On the Anniversary of Majuba day at the Camp of Paardeburg, Modder River.
