Employment Advisory Com. Reorganized

SUMMERSIDE — A review of past accomplishments and a preview of proposed operations were the highlights of the first meeting of the reorganized local employment advisory committee, held in the National Employment Office here recently.

The review was given by Earl Cannon, manager of NES and the preview by newly-appointed chairman, John S. Wright. Others in attendance were Jack Murphy, Frank Jenkins, Urban Laughin, Ernest Murphy and Miss Alice Gallant.

The committee is composed of representatives of organizations of labor and management and advised the local office manager on matters affecting the operation of the employment service and employment in general.

Mr. Cannon noted that many of the items discussed, proposed and supported by the committee have become realities. A review of the proposed industrial park site was given, as well as the recent economic survey in Prince County.

Mr. Wright noted that several groups have been requesting the establishment of the industrial park site here for several years and it now appears that federal financial assistance will be granted to set it up, following which the same groups should do everything in their power to induce industry to locate here.

U.S. Navy Seeks Ally In Trained Porpoises

By RALPH DIGHTON

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An attempt to control a school of porpoises swimming free in the open sea will be made this summer off the island of Oahu in Hawaii.

Dr. Kenneth Norris, University of California zoologist, has trained six of the sea - going mammals in a salt - water lagoon and plans to release them in the Pacific.

Norris believes he can control the porpoises with underwater sound signals audible to porpoises over distances of several hundred yards.

If he succeeds, the experiment could lead to an understanding at last of how these warm - blooded, air - breathing creatures are able to survive depths far below the reach of human divers with the latest equipment.

If he fails, the porpoises will swim to freedom in the ocean and Norris will have to start over again, training more porpoises.

The potential military value of porpoises under man's control has whetted scientific imagination for years. The U.S. Navy currently is conducting secret tests with them in a lagoon at Point Mugu, Calif., headquarters of the Pacific missile range.

These experiments are reported to be aimed at establishing ultimately a language between men and porpoises—with porpoises mimicking the human voice or men imitating porpoise clicks and whistles by mechanical means.

But Norris and fellow geologist Dr. Ron Turner report that men still have a lot to learn about winning friends among the porpoises.

They are working with a female named Alice, borrowed from the navy, in an effort to determine how finely porpoises' famed sonar (echo location system) can discriminate between objects.

Alice, kept in a 24-foot-diameter tank on the campus got a fish every time she tripped a lever underneath the larger of two spheres side by side in the water.

Her sonar, which enables her to distinguish instantly between natural prey and debris even in murky water, is something the navy would like to copy. Human made sonar frequently mistakes whales for submarines and vice versa.

Turner trained Alice down to a point where, blindfolded, she could distinguish between ball bearings two inches and three-quarters of an inch in diameter.

Norris and Turner can't talk about what the navy is doing at Point Mugu.

But if a porpoise could be taught to communicate with people it also might make a fine spy, reporting the movements of enemy ships and submarines.

How would a porpoise know they are enemies? Teach him to recognize the difference in engine sounds made by vessels built in different countries.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Opening lead—six of spades

The United States defeated Great Britain 78 to 35 when their teams met in the third day of the 12 - day World Bridge Olympiad held in New York in May.

The match was generally expected to be close, but the American team got off to a good start in the 18-deal clash and kept on increasing their lead until they finally won by the decisive margin of 38 international match points.

The U.S. team gained 10 IMPs on the accompanying deal. The British South opened the bidding as dealer with three spades.

Robert Jordan (playing with Arthur Robinson) was East and was faced with a difficult decision after West and North had passed. He had only 14 high-card points and was vulnerable besides, but, after great thought, he decided to risk three no-trump.

This turned out to be an excellent decision. South led a spade and Jordan won it with the nine and played a club, losing the jack to the ace. North now led the ace and another diamond, taken with the queen.

Another club lead lost to the king and the outcome was that Jordan made four notrump in a hand where he could not have been censured for passing three spades. He lost two clubs and a diamond, and scored 630 points.

The British East was faced with the same problem when the hand was played at the second table. The American South (Samuel Stayman, playing with Victor Mitchell) also opened with three spades, which was followed by two passes.

The East at this table (Boris Schapiro, playing with Terence Reese) also thought the matter over carefully and finally decided to pass.

Stayman went down four for a loss of 200 points, but the United States gained 430 points on the deal, or 10 IMPs. Both Easts were faced with a decision where anything they did might easily turn out to be wrong; but, in the actual deal, Jordan was indubitably right.
