Opening lead—two of diamonds

One of the secrets of good defensive play is to put yourself in the position of the declarer and think in terms of how, as declarer, you would play a given hand.

East, by bold and imaginative play, succeeded in upsetting the four spade contract in today's deal.

He took the first two diamond tricks and promptly returned the seven of hearts. This extraordinary play had the desired effect upon declarer. The heart return had all the earmarks of being a singleton lead.

South won the heart in dummy and led the queen of spades. When East followed with the four, declarer was afraid to finesse for fear West might win with the King and return a heart which East would ruff for the setting trick.

So South went up with the ace of spades and led back a spade which went to East's king. East returned a club.

Declarer won, and still having a heart loser to contend with, took a heart finesse. East took it with the blank king, and fourth trick for the defense, and South was down one.

Had East followed the more normal line of defense, he would have returned a club at trick three. Declarer, undoubtedly, would have tried both the heart, and spade finesses and made ten tricks.

But obsessed by the idea East had sold him—that the heart return was a singleton, thus marking West with the king of hearts—declarer thought he was guaranteeing the contract by refusing the spade finesse.

Had he known the actual situation, South would have made eleven tricks.

East's heart play was supersound. A prosaic club return was bound to give declarer the hand. South was sure to have the A-K of clubs as part of his opening bid and rebid. Only by planting in South's mind the thought that a heart ruff was imminent could East have a chance to beat the contract.

South aptly summarized the defense in one word when he said after the hand: "Touche!"

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
