Opening lead—nine of hearts.

It is a very common thing for declarer to find that it is more dangerous to have one defender in the lead than the other. When this situation arises the declarer should attempt to shape his play, if possible, so that the dangerous opponent is kept out of the lead.

South applied this principle successfully to the play of today's hand. He took the heart lead in his own hand and saw there were only seven ready tricks available. There did not seem to be much chance of making nine tricks unless the diamond suit could be established.

Since this could hardly be done unless West had the ace of diamonds, South had to proceed on the assumption West had the ace. Accordingly, he led a diamond toward dummy, whereupon West played the queen.

South made the winning play of allowing the queen to hold the trick. Had he gone up with the king, he would have been defeated. West returned a heart. Declarer won with the ace and led another diamond. West took his ace, but there was nothing he could do to prevent declarer from taking ten tricks.

The key play took place when the queen of diamonds was permitted to win. Suppose South had taken the trick with the king. West would then win the diamond return with the ace. The next time diamonds were led, though, East would enter the picture with the jack to fire the queen of clubs through South's king and make mincemeat of the contract.

Behind the duck of the queen of diamonds lies some very sound reasoning. Once the diamond ace is consigned to West's hand, the chief danger which still exists is that east may obtain the lead to attack the king of clubs.

Easts's only possible entry card is the jack of diamonds, and ducking the queen guards against the possibility.

It is interesting to note West cannot escape his fate by going up with the ace immediately. He can still be forced to win the next diamond lead with the queen.

Yesterday's Answer

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:
A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

A Cryptogram Quotation

B O R T Y P M L O M F H J F L, B O R T O J T J W K M R F, L O R I P T M F K R P K — B O M L L M R W.

Yesterday's Cryptoquote: THERE IS NO DEATH! WHAT SEEMS SO IS TRANSITION—LONGFELLOW.
