The HOUSEWIFE and HER ACTIVITIES

COURAGE

Strive on.
For even if we fail, as many must,
To reach the goal towards which our face is set,
Yet in the striving we may win
such strength,
May find such unsought treasures
on the way,
That when the years have passed and we sum up
What now may look like failure we may find
What in that failure lives a true success.

WELL DRESSED MALE WILL WEAR PASTEL SHADED HOST SUIT

Here's news for the men—they can decide for themselves if it's good or bad.

A host suit in pastel shades, with a shawl collar and a wide sash of silk has emerged as the latest dictate of what the well-dressed male shall wear when entertaining at home or on semi-formal occasions.

Walter A. Stressen-Reuter of Chicago, chairman of the fashion show at the joint convention of the national association of merchant tailors and the merchant tailor designers association at a local hotel, told about it today.

He said it would do away with the customary dinner jacket and in contrast to the sober black it would be available in maroon, light blue, wine and green.

EVERYBODY INSANE BY 2139, HE SAYS

Everybody will be insane by 2139 A. D. if the present increase in insanity is maintained, the Executive Club was told by David Seabury, New York psychologist.

There has been a 30 per cent increase in insanity during the last 10 years.

He described worry as one of the first steps toward insanity and warned his audience against "worry monger."

CHECK LIST FOR SMALL VEGETABLE GARDEN

Maximum profits from the home garden are reaped when all work is done by the owner. The size of the most profitable garden will therefore depend upon the amount of leisure the owner has and his inclination to do gardening work.

Unless the product of the home garden is needed for food which could not be purchased, it is not wise to plant a larger space than will be well tended. Two hours on each of three days a week devoted to this leisurely pleasant and healthful physical recreation will take good care of a garden 30 by 40 feet or thereabouts; and from this space can be harvested vegetables sufficient for the average family, except for potatoes and sweet corn.

In deciding what shall be grown, these crops may be considered as neessary in most sections of our country:

Beans, Lima beans, Beets, Carrots, Cabbage, Chard, Cucumbers, Lettuce, Parsnips, Parsley, Peppers, Onion sets, Peas, Radishes, Swiss chard, Tomatoes.

Eliminate, of course, those you do not like, and remember that it is better to grow small amounts of many things than to devote your entire area to relatively few vegetables which will likely be overproduced and give you a monotonous diet.

One of the great advantages of the home garden is the opportunity it gives to grow annual vegetables which you might not otherwise try. To replace items eliminated from the above list, or to add to it if you have the space, here are some suggestions:

Brussels sprouts for fall crop; celery, broccoli, especially the green sprouting, Chinese cabbage for fall salads; savoy cabbage, a great delicacy; chicory or endive for fall green salads; collards, corn salad egg plant, celeriac, cress, kale, kohlrabi, leek, melons, mustard greens, pumpkin, okra, oyster plant, spinnach, squash, both the wnter kind and the summer varetles which are so delicious in the baby stage, especially the vegetable marrows; and turnips and rutabagas, which are especially successful in sections which have an early spring and late fall.

A ramble through your seed catalogue will produce other suggestions which should be considered in making up your seed order. Some new vegetable or variety added to your list will give you more pleasure than the staples, and it will be something to serve your friends when they come to dine.

GEORGETOWN LADY SAYS, "ABSOLUTELY A GENUINE REMEDY FOR 'FLU'"

Isn't it just wonderful to know that you needn't worry one little bit about 'flu? That BUCKLEY'S MIXTURE, according to Mrs. F. B. Evans, Georgetown, is "Absolutely a genuine remedy" for this terrible scourge that carries off thousands every year. Just read what this lady says:

"I used your BUCKLEY'S MIXTURE this Winter. It is absolutely a genuine remedy for 'flu, if taken in time. 'Acts like a flash' is true in every way."

There is liable to be an epidemic of 'flu any time. Be prepared. Get a bottle of this marvellous preparation TODAY. Remember — BUCKLEY'S MIXTURE has no equal for coughs, colds or bronchitis, as well as 'flu. It acts like a flash —a single sip proves it. Buckley's is sold everywhere. Refuse substitutes.

Can Love Survive Shoestring Marriage? Girl Who is in Love With Married Employer But Knows She is Only "Side Dish"

Dear Miss Dix—Will you settle this argument for us? A says that a man and a woman who are in love should marry even thought they are poor and have no more money than enough to buy the wedding ring.

He contends that fighting the battle to success together will make the bonds of affection stronger between them. B says thata couple should wait until they can afford to marry, even though this postpones the marriage quite a while. He says that a marriage must have the proper financial backing to make it a success. Which is right?

C. C. S. AND J. F. P.

Answer:

Whether a young couple should marry on a shoestring or not depends altogethr upon their characters, their ability, the mode of life to which they have been accustomed, and most of all upon whether they are capable of a great love or not.

What would be a great and glorious adventure to one man and woman would be a terrible, disillusioning disaster to another. Where one man and woman would fight through to victory a thousand would go down in defeat. Where poverty endured together would make one love all the stronger it would kill a lesser love.

Some of the most beautiful romances in the world are those of young people who have married without a dollar in their pockets, and who have worked and struggled and hoped and triumphed together. I know many such couples and they delight to tell how they started housekeping in one room with a few sticks of furniture they were paying for on the installment plan; of how the wife washed her husband's shirt at night so he might have a clean one to put on in the morning; of how she walked miles to cut-rate butchers and city markets to save a few cents on the food, and of how the buying of a new pair of shoes, or a hat, was an event that they considered a regular spree.

These are those whose poverty knits them together, closer than any rich husband and wife can ever be because they have suffered together, they have toiled together, they are soldiers who have fought shoulder to shoulder until they have become literally one. But the sting was taken out of poverty for them because of their great love. Having each other was more to them than riches or luxuries. Having each other, they could do without everything else.

But there are so few capable of a great love that it makes marriage without adequate financial support a risk that few are justified in taking. For the very lovers who swear that they would die for each other cannot endure the test of a lowered scal of livirig. Cupid can stand a lot of punishment. He can survive time and absence. He can mock at persecution. But when it comes to doing without the comforts to which he has been accustomed, he flies out of the bungalow or two-by-four flat window.

It sounds sordid, but it is none the less true, that even romance has a price-tag upon it and illusions cost money to keep up. The prettiest girl in the world is not so pretty without her chiffons and her finger waves and her visits to the beauty parlor. The most glamorous youth has his halo dimmed when he can't afford a haircut and hasn't a penny in his pocket. Many a man looking at his shabby, tired, overworked wife sees in her none of the beauty and charm for which he married her. Many a woman looking at her shabby, unkempt husband wonders why she threw away a good home or a good job for him.

Human nature is what it is, and we are not sentimental when we are hungry or cold or sedy looking, or when we are worried about where the rent is to come from. When we are uncomfortable and anxious, we are thinking more of our stomachs than we are of our hearts.

Also, we are the creatures of habit. Our happiness depends upon our having the environment, the food, the association, the amusements, the clothes that we have had all our lives. The habit of comfort is stronger than most love and so when a man and woman have to live in a place that is an affront to their every instinct of taste; when they have to wear cheap and common clothes; when they have to eat poor food; when they have to drop out of their old set because they cannot afford to go with it, and when they have to depend upon each other for all their society and amusement, they are likly to turn upon each other with bitter reproaches, each blaming the other for having dragged him or her down to poverty.

And so while money is not absolutely necessary to the success of a marriage, it makes it far less of a risk.

Dear Dorothy Dix—Lately I have found that I care too much for my employer, and that it makes me jealous and fills me with hate when I hear him talking to his wife and planning dates and parties with her. I did not feel this way until he made advances to me and showed me little attentions that I did not have the power to resist. I am a lot younger and prettier than the wife, though he seems to care for her, but it must flatter his vanity to have me as a "side dish." Knowing that mine is a losing game, what do you advise me to do? Keep on playing with no hope of winning, or should I forget everything and look for another job?

E. F.

Answer:

I thank you for that phrase "side dish." It so perfectly sums up what the girl is who gives her heart to a mannied man. A "side dish" to his feast of life. A few sugary kisses to add a little stolen sweets to his menu. Another under-the-rose romance to give relish and piquancy and put a little pep into humdrum domesticity.

Fine for the man, but hard on the poor little "side dish" that will be pushed aside when his appetite for it is seated, and that he never intended for his main dish, anyway.

But knowing that you are a "side dish," why do you continue to be one? Why do you waste yourself upon a married man instead of saving yourself for a single one with whom you will be the whole thing? You know well enough, because you have seen it happen over and over again in offices, that the boss who philanders with his pretty girl employe bodes her no good, as old-fashioned melodramas used to say.

He is just amusing himself with her. He isn't really in love with her and he has no notion on earth of divorcing his wife and marrying her. It is fun to play around with her, and it ministers to his vanity to find out that he is still a devil of a fellow among the women, but he isn't going to get into any scandal of divorce or break up his home.

And as soon as he really does win the girl's heart and her love begins to be a burden to him, he fires her. And that's that. And it is nothing to him that he has embittered her life and kept her from marrying and filled her heart so full of affection for him that she will never have any love to give to any other man.

Every business girl has seen the tragedy of the girl who fell in love with her boss happen over and over again, and why she doesn't take warning nobody knows. One would think that the minute a girl discovered herself taking the faintest interest in her boss that she would give notice and quit. Unless she was a gold-digger, which not many girls are.

Daintiness With Chic Styles

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished with Every Pattern

BY ANNABELLE WORTHINGTON

Today's cunning model can be carried out in several materials with charming variations.

For instance, the original dress was in navy blue checked woolen. The darling tubbable blouse was white lawn printed in blue. It could also have a blouse of red toning woolen. It is so attractive and practical for school wear, and lovely later for spring.

Another jaunty idea is to make the dress of red plaided gingham or woolen with the jacket of dark blue woolen weave.

Style No. 490 is designed for sizes 8, 10, 12 and 14 years.

Size 8 requires 1¾ yards of 54-inch material for jacket and skirt, 1⅛ yards of 39-inch material for blouse, ⅛ yard of 27-inch contrasting.

Price of PATTERN 15 cents in stamps or coin (coin is preferred). Wrap coin carefully.

CHAPTER 86

GOOD FORTUNE

Later that afternoon Henry Harrison came dashing out in a taxi cab.

His homely honest face wore a look of intense excitement. He scarcely waited to greet Adele and Jeanne, before he snatched a telegram from his pocket and waved it before the latter's eyes.

"Greet good luck, girl Read that!"

Jeanne took it from him and glanced it over. It was a long message and proved to be utterly unintelligible jargon to her.

"What does it mean?" she asked.

"It means money!" he cried excitedly. "It's about that piece of land of yours, down beyond the railroad. Girl, you were right, when you said it would be valuable some day. The railroad is going to run across that piece of land, and they are buying it for——well I'm afraid to tell you right now! You would say it was a fairy tale. I'll know all the particulars tomorrow. Meanwhile, you can begin considering yourself a young heiress."

"But the propety isn't mine any more," protested Jeanne. "I sold it to you."

"Forget it!" he laughed. "I only took it as security for the money I loaned you when you wanted to stay on here. You can buy it back from me at the same price, and then sell it to the railroad."

"But that's ridiculous," protested Jeanne. "You bought a worthless piece of property just to help me out of a jam, and if you realize a fortune on it, that's you're good luck."

But even while she said it, she was fairly dizzy with the possibilities of what this money could mean to her. It would mean that she could pay off all her harrassing debts. It would mean that once again she could hold her head up before tradespeople. Never again would she have to fear Madame Julie and the rest!

In her heart she knew that it was not fair to Harrison to accept this sacrifice, but she also knew that he was man enough not to take advantage of a business transaction which she had made through the force of necessity.

"I'll have enough anyway Jeanne," he assured her. "Several pretty good little deals have come my way lately, and when you pay me back after your property is sold, I'll have all I started with and more.

"But it doesn't seem right," she heard herself saying, and wondered if this could be Jeanne Dare.

How life had changed her in a few short months!

"Nonsense," he scoffed. "You're the one who had the vision. You always said the railroad would make that land valuable. If I'd had your faith and gone out and bought your land with that idea in mind, it would be a different matter. But I didn't. I just took that property as security really. But you'll remember I told you, that it was better for me to buy it outright because of what people would say if they learned that I had loaned you money."

"Of course, Jeanne. Don't be ridiculous!" Adele put in. "I never heard of anything so quixotic in my life. If the gods toss a fortune into your lap, I don't call it very good manners to fling it back at them. Heavens! How I wish I had your chance!"

Jeanne left Adele and Harrison sitting before the fire and went over to the window to stare out at the bleak winter landscape.

How mocking it was that her good fortune had come too late, she thought!

Or was it too late?

Was it possible that the break with Barstowe's family could be patched up? Was it possible that she could pay her debts and hold up her head again? Was it possible that the burglary at the Barstowe country place had removed all trace of her duplicity in the matter of the pearls? Was it possible that Vera Dayton would cease to antagonize Vic's family against her and that Jeffries the secretary would keep his mouth shut about the stolen letter?

For an instant she dared hope. . .

While she stood there at the window Barstowe's car rolled into view. It drew up to the curb and he sprang out and hurried up the walk.

Annual Meeting Queen County L.O.L.

The annual meeting of Queen's County L. O. L. met at Clyde River with the members of Hamilton L. O. L. No. 1366 on Tuesday, February 5th. The day was bright and clear but frosty and a capacity house greeted the occasion, for all roads that day in Queen's led to Clyde River, some driving twenty-six miles to attend the meeting.

The providing of food for the visiting brethren was freely and bountifully done by the sisters of the L. O. B. A. at Clyde River and the wives and sisters of members of Hamilton Lodge and long before the clock struck five the delightful fumes of the culinary art and coffee ascended the stairway of the beautiful lodge room of No. 1366 that attracted the appetite of all present, when a halt of an hour and a half was ordered.

Many and varied were the complimentary remarks that were uttered as each table was replenished and as Highlanders march well, so did the lassies work well as serving the members at the tables when they heard the Highland pipes played by Bro. John Macl..nnon of Caledonia.

When lunch was over the ladies were invited to the lodge room where an unanimous vote of thanks was tendered the ladies and many complimentary speeches by the brethren bestowed upon them.

The vote of thanks was responded to by Mrs. Seymour Scott in her always pleasing manner on behalf of the ladies.

The lodge resumed business and the election of officers followed: County Master, E. C. Holm; C. D. M., Charles Bentley; C. Chap., Jas. MacPhail; C. Re. Sec., A. E. Dollar; C. F. Sec., Seymour Scott; C. T. F., G. MacPhail; Lect., Clifford Proude; C. Marshal, Harold MacKee; C. D. L., Cyrus MacNeill and F. C. Dollar; Auditors, G. W. Hooper, Bergus Newsom. The officers were then installed by P. C. M. D. MacPhail.

At the close of the meeting the brethren dispersed to their homes satisfied the County L. O. L of Queen's was in a healthy condition.

FAREWELL GATHERING

On the evening of January 30, 1934 a number of friends and neighbors met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Stewart to bid farewell to Mrs. Norman McAuley who expects to leave the community in the near futre.

The following address was read by Miss A. B. Mabey:

Mrs. Norman McAuley,
Murray Harbor.

Dear Mrs. McAuley: It is with feelings of deep regret that we your friends and neighbors hear of your proposed departure from among us in the near futre. Though your stay in this community has been a comparatively short one, your friendly, cheerful disposition and unfailing courtesy has so endeared you to those with whom you came in contact that we feel we are losing a very real friend. In the church to which you belong, you have been a willing worker, always ready to give of your time, talent and means to any worthy cause. In the Sunday School, in the choir and in the various church societies you will be sadly missed, and we realize that your place will be hard to fill.

In many homes in the neighborhood in sickness and in trouble, you have proved yourself a "friend indeed" because a "friend in need."

We would ask you now, Mrs. McAuley, to accept this little gift not for its worth but just as a token of our love and affection. When you go from here please remember that you carry with you kindly thoughts from every one and our best wishes for your future health, happiness and prosperity.

We pray, too, that God's richest blessings may rest upon you and Miss Betty wherever your home may be, knowing that our loss will be gain for some other community.

Signed on behalf of your friends neighbors and fellow workers.

LAURETTA J. BROOK
ISABELLE STEWART
MARIA A. KEEPING

While the address was being read the gift a sum of money was presented by Mrs. J. H. Livingstone. Mrs. McAuley although taken by surprise thanked the people for their kindness to her.

A very pleasant social evening was spent with music, recitations and games. A dainty lunch was served by the ladies.

The singing of "God be with you——" brought an enjoyable evening to a close.

AVIATION SHARES DROP IN N.Y. MARKET

By John L. Cooley,
Associated Press Financial Writer.
(By Guardian's Special Wire)

NEW YORK, Feb. 11.—A crack-up in aviation shares and a rally from substantial early declines elsewhere featured a busy market for stocks Saturday.

The immediate response to proposed Federal regulation and cancellation of the government's air-mail contracts was a heavy wave of selling which broke prices 1 to around 3 points, but the tide ebbed mid-way through the session and left comparatively few prominent casualties, these being largely in the aviation and inactive specialty sections. The average net change, in fact, was a loss of only three-tenths point.

Wall Street's second thoughts on the question of a regulatory opinion was still rather confused. Several houses pointed out that the act had not yet been passed and that it might be modified during its course through Congress, a view which some Washington advices tended to support. Also, the proposed effective date, Oct. 1, would seem to provide sufficient time to permit leisurely adjustments, to whatever new order is arranged.

Aviation Stock

The opening saw a scramble to unload equities of many descriptions, especially those of companies intersted in flying. Aviation Corp. opened with a 20,000-share block at 5⅝, off 3¼; Douglas, Curtis Wright Common and North American Aviation were also hit. The opening in United Aircraft was delayed until about 11 o'clock. Its first appearance being 3,400 shares at a decline of 3⅞. Later this issue extended its loss to 7 points and closed near the bottom, although others managed to make more substantial recoveries; Douglas' opening loss of 3½ was cut to ⅝ net.

Metal Shares

When the market began to steady metal shares came to the fore with a rally that endured to the close. U. S. Smelting soared 5¼, Howe Sound, American Smelting, American Metals and Cerro De Pasco rose fractions to more than a point. U. S. Steel, after touching 54¼, closed at 55⅞, off ⅝. General Motors, American Telephone, New York Central, North American and Union Carbide were among numerous leaders to return little or no net change. Chrysler, whose new annual dividend basis of $1 compares with two 50 cents payments in the last six months, lost one. American Can strengthened nearly 2 net.

HEADACHE SUFFERERS

How Many of the Ordinary Tablets do You Take to Relieve a Headache or a Pain?

Some take as many as six tablets at a time; there are cases where as many as a dozen tablets are taken to relieve a headache or a pain. It is not necessary to take that many if you take the better tablets. Why not use ASCO tablets?

ASCO tablets are only double in size but are many times more effective than the ordinary five grain tablets. All you need is one or two ASCO tablets to relieve the most violent Headache, racking Neuralgia, Rheumatic and other pains including periodic pains; just one or two ASCO's—that's all you need. You will find ASCO tablets amazingly better—quick and safe—and harmful or habit forming drugs does not produce gas on stomach as the others do.

If you are a user of headache or pain tablets—switch to ASCO. These tablets will help where others fail, because every safe pain—soothing and pain removing ingredient known to modern science is in them.

ASCO tablets are for sale by all reliable druggists and dealers in Red, White and Blue boxes also in trial packets. Be sure to get the genuine ASCO, each tablet is stamped A-S-C-O.
