After Ten Years

BY MARION RUBINCAN

CONTRITION

Chapter 38

Humphrey rarely became entirely angry. When he did, as is usually the case, it was a blazing anger, and it smouldered for weeks afterwards.

When his face went red and his fist came down with a smash upon the table, Millie knew that neither soft words nor complaisance on her part would quiet him until he had literally worn off his temper. She said very little, and looked relieved when he left the house for the evening.

Then she let loose her now nervous, repressed feelings, and began to cry.

At this point Patty came in.

Patty was usually sympathetic. This time she was simply quiet. Mrs. Parke had gone to a friend's for dinner and Patty had been in the kitchen getting the last dish ready for the table when the explosion occurred.

She brought in the belated meal now, and sat down, still without saying a word. Millie wept a little more, she wanted sympathy.

When none was offered, she dried her eyes, and helped herself to some dinner.

"I really don't want anything to eat," she said, sniffing a little and wiping her eyes again. Her plate did not quite bear out her statement.

"I'm an awful fool," she remarked since Patty was still silent.

"Why do you provoke scenes?" she at last asked finally, her tones still impersonal.

"I don't know." Millie looked at her chop. She really had been upset enough to lose her appetite. But she was calm now and hungry. Yet somehow she couldn't play the injured wife and eat the large dinner before her. She decided finally that it was no use trying to deceive Patty, so she picked up her knife and fork.

"He gets on my nerves so," she volunteered finally. "I do like him sometimes. But most of the time I hate him. I can't help it. I see too much of him. He's let himself get fat and uninteresting and sloppy. He used to tell me when I looked pretty, now he only tells me when I look ugly! He used to like racing places with me, now he—he doesn't care."

"Don't you see," she went on, deepening that frowning line between her eyes in her concentration as she tried to make things clear to herself as well as her sister, "don't you see, it isn't even as though he liked to take other women out. That would be, well, different. It's just his."

"Indifference," Patty supplied.

"Yes, that's it. He doesn't care about anything. He likes to have people come here evenings, but he's too indolent half the time to call them up and arrange parties. He likes parties when he goes to them, except dances, but half the time he doesn't want to stir from his chair and his slippers to go."

"Would you like it better if he were interested in some other woman?" Patty asked, her mind had been revolving this suggestion while Millie went on talking.

"I don't know." Millie helped herself to a little more of everything on the table. "He's never been interested in any woman but me. I suppose he never will be."

She spoke calmly, unconscious of the enormous egotism of her words, as perfectly satisfied with herself as she was dissatisfied with her husband.

"I suppose you mean," Patty began, "that anything definite, even something not pleasant, would be better than this present, rather negative state."

"That's it exactly," Millie said, pleased to have her idea put so her in this brief fashion.

"It's all part of being married," she went on philosophically. "I s'pose Cora has the worst of it. Everyone knows there's another woman and she does too. But she pretends she doesn't, even to Jim, just so as not to face a situation she wouldn't know what to do with. But then, she's fond of Jim, and happy as long as she knows where he is. Maybe it's worse to be unhappy when the man is around the house, but what can you expect after ten years? There's no novelty about the man or your home by that time.

"Ten years is the worst period. I think then that people either smash, separate, I mean, or, if they can stand out for a while longer, they get so used to each other they don't mind, get the habit of each other, as one woman I know used to say.

"I'm not old enough to accept the prospect of being with Hunt always all my life without feeling lively. Heavens, it might be fifty years! I know I'll grow callous, but I'm not callous yet, and I've just a few more years ahead of me, to feel alive. I can do something or be something yet. I mean I could if he hadn't lost his money. It's nothing now but housework and sewing and nothing nice, and no chance to get away even for a short time."

HERMAN KURTZTISCH

Milwaukee, Wis.

"When it comes to eating, working and sleeping, I'm like a different man from what I was a short time ago," said Herman Kurtztisch, 406 1-2 Norris Place, Milwaukee, with the Northwestern Life Insurance Co., in relating his experience with Tanlac.

"My whole system was about to give way as a result of two years' constant suffering from stomach trouble and I was so run down and worn out I was hardly able to work. I actually dreaded to eat, as after every meal I suffered so terribly from heartburn, and I was so nervous I got little rest day or night.

"If it hadn't been for Tanlac I'm firmly convinced I would have had to resign my place. It came to my aid in the nick of time and I am strong for it. Tanlac was worth at least fifty times what it cost me."

Tanlac is sold in Charlottetown by Reddin Bros., and leading druggists everywhere.

Oil Light Beats Electric Or Gas

BURNS 94 PER CENT AIR

A new oil lamp that gives an amazingly brilliant, soft, white light, even better than gas or electricity, has been tested by the U. S. Government and 35 leading universities and found to be superior to 10 ordinary oil lamps. It burns without odor, smoke or noise—no pumping up, is simple clear safe. Burns 94 per cent. air and 6 per cent. common kerosene (coal-oil).

The inventor, G. A. Johnson, 246 Craig St., W., Montreal, is offering to send a lamp on 10 day's FREE trial, or even to give one FREE to the first user in each locality who will help him introduce it. Write him today for full particulars. Also ask him to explain how you can get the agency, and without experience or money make $250 to $500 per month.

Orchid Search Full Of Romance

LONDON, Eng., Dec. 31.—Of all the hobbies hit by the war few suffered more severely than the cult of the orchid. It was not merely that the collectors who are always roaming the steamy swamps of the tropics found something else to do, but also that the coal famine forced scores of private collectors to close their orchid houses.

Now the orchid is coming back to its own; collectors are again invading the forests of the Amazon and the jungles at the base of the Himalayas, and the most wonderful of flowers is regaining all its former popularity.

New varieties of orchids are produced from seed by means of cross fertilization, a process both tedious and difficult.

Some varieties have defied the collector in this respect, but it has recently been discovered that the services of a certain microscopic fungus are necessary to aid in the fertilization. It is a discovery which little is known at present except to the experts, but one which is of considerable commercial importance.

One of the greatest of English orchid collectors was Alderman Bolton, ex-Lord Mayor of Liverpool, whose death was recently announced. Before the war he had in his houses as many as 100,000 specimens of orchids at one time and his collectors went all over the tropics in search of new specimens.

The story of the search for orchids is full of romance. The finest specimens grow in fever swamps, where a white man can hardly live for more than a few days at a time. They are found near the tops of giant trees, and for every three orchids brought to England it is estimated that one forest monarch must have been felled.

An orchid hunter, searching through the wilds of New Guinea, discovered a brand new variety growing in a native cemetery. But it was as much as his life was worth to trespass there, and the only way in which he could win permission was by a huge bribe of glass beads offered to the chief.

Another orchid hunter, M. Hamelin, seeking rarities in Madagascar, found that his only possible life insurance was to become "blood brother" to a native chieftain. Incidentally, this process involved the risk, if the blood brother died, of the other having to marry the dead man's wife and take charge of his entire family.

To find the plants is one thing, to carry them another. The plants are wired to sticks and packed in boxes to be carried to the coast. The worst risk comes when the precious cargo has been put aboard ship. If stowed too near the boilers or to sunlight, or if not provided with sufficient air, every plant will probably die.

Nor do the plants fetch as much in the wholesale market as might be expected, unless definitely known to be rarities. The price, for instance, of the beautiful Odontoglossum Crispum, which comes from New Granada, is only about £80 per thousand.

The value of this orchid depends entirely upon the markings on its petals. While a common white Crispum is worth a shilling or two only, as much as 800 guineas has been paid for a plant with elaborately marked flowers.

It is on record that a private collector bought an orchid from a firm of growers for half a crown and when it flowered and showed itself to be a new variety, sold it back for 400 pounds.

1,325 Scientists

Registration at Toronto is Larger Than Expected

TORONTO, Jan. 3.—Registration at the big convention of the American Association for the advancement of Science reached the total of 1,325 today, a much larger number than had been expected when the Toronto convention was planned. It was expected that about 1,000 delegates would be present. The convention ranks, therefore, as one of the greatest scientific gatherings on record.

Today the convention was split up into 25 sections, and at that some of the various branches were doubled up to hear certain addresses. Delegates are in attendance from all parts of the United States and Canada, and the Canadians, it is noted, are holding their own very well in the contributions enlightening and interesting addresses on scientific subjects.

Lady Strathcona Makes Donation To Pearson Memorial

LONDON, Jan. 2.—Lady Strathcona has given £1,000 to the Sir Arthur Pearson memorial fund.

At the suggestion of Lady Pearson it is to be divided as follows.

One-third of the subscriptions will be devoted to St. Dunstan's the noted institution for the blind, founded by Sir Arthur; one-third to the national institute for the blind and one third to be divided amongst all other blind charities. Subscriptions to the fund are open to all parts of the British Empire. The memorial fund is intended as a perpetual encouragement for all who dwell in darkness.

Drugs Excite Your Kidneys, Use Salts

IF YOUR BACK HURTS OR BLADDER BOTHERS DRINK LOTS OF WATER

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water, you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with litha, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

MAN WHO POSED AS POSTAL OFFICIAL GETS AWAY WITH FINGER PRINT EVIDENCE

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., Dec. 30.—A stranger who represented himself as a post office inspector, entered police headquarters yesterday, gave an officer a narcotized cigarette and while the latter was unconscious walked out with finger print evidence obtained by the police from a bottle of explosives used in a recent robbery of a Santa Fe mail car near Edmund, Okla.

The stranger introduced himself as Mr. Williams.

H. A. Murphy, bertillion expert, produced the finger prints and was talking to the man about the robbery when the latter offered him a cigarette, the officer related after two physicians had spent three hours reviving him.

Murphy said that after lighting the cigarette he talked a few minutes to the man and then lost consciousness.

His last remembrance, he said, was seeing the stranger reach for the prints and hearing them say: "Well, I got you that time."

No clue has been found as to the man's identity.

Sage Tea Darkens Hair to Any Shade

DON'T STAY GRAY! HERE'S AN OLD-TIME RECIPE THAT ANY BODY CAN APPLY

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and attractive. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is messy and out of date. Nowadays by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients, which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.
