COULDN'T SEE THE POINT—Bill A——, like many a smarter man, labored under the delusion that he possessed a splendid voice, and "oft in the stilly night," but more frequently in broad day, he startled the echoes of the surrounding woods and hills with what he called "delicious notes," of his favorite "Annie Lourie," or, in his words," Annie Lowry."

One day Bill was down on the river bank, among the laurel, polishing his gun, working away in utter oblivion of all the world, encouraging himself with an occasionally "snatch of song," when he was suddenly hailed from the other side of the stream with:

"Hallo, over there?"

"Hallo, yourself?" answered Bill, peering through the thicket, when he saw the brigade quartermaster, who continued:

"Seen any mules about here?"

"No," replied Bill, testingly; "I don't keep your cussed mules."

"I suppose not," retorted the quartmaster dryly; "only I heard a d—l of a braying over there, and thought it might be them; but I find it is only a stray jackass."

The officer rode off, and Bill, scratching his head for a while, observed:

"Well, I 'spect Captain R——said somethin' sharp then—if a feller could only see the point."

A lady writting to an American paper on the training of boy's says, "Oh, mothers, hunt out the soft, tender, genial side of your boy's nature." We have a distinct rememberance of our mother's following this advice and applying thereto a poultice composed of spank, strap. and old shoe, and we believe the result was both satisfactory and beneficial. Mothers, try it.

A Western Hoosier called on a boat captain to sell him a saddle of mutton: "Say, Captain, don't you want to buy a nice saddle of mutton to-day?" "No: I would as lief eat dirt," replied the captain. "Well, said the Hoosier, "It's according to how a man has been raised. Now, I would rather eat mutton!"

WORK FOR THE SEASON.

MUCK. The time is at hand for securing a year's stock of this useful article. There is no better time to dig muck than after haying, and before harvesting. The water is low at this season of the year, and it is more convient to secure the muck, especially when it is deep. There are farmers who have doubts about the value of the article for farm purposes, notwithstanding all that has been written in its fafour for many years past. There can be no doubt about its value as an absorbent, whether it possesses any fertilizing properties in itself or not. There is a great difference in the quality of what is termed muck. In some cases it is nearly all leaf mud, while in other locations it is very light and poor. The very poorest is better than none, because it will answer a most excellent purpose to absorb the liquids. In order to secure the very best results a sufficient quantity should always be near at hand so that a free use may be made of it in the pig pens, and in barn cellars when the urine drips down on to the manure heap. We often noticed barnyards where there was a quantity of liquid manure left exposed to waste, when if a quantity of muck had been carted into the yard there would be many loads of good manure secured. Muck should never be used in a fresh state, for it has a degree of acidity when first dug that renders it unfit for use. It is much better to keep a year's stock on hand, and then after it has been exposed to the action of frost and rain it is very much improved. Many persons mix quick lime with fresh muck, and thus sweeter the whole mass and make it fit for use sooner than it otherwise would be. In some instances "two birds may be killed with one stone," as the saying is, for the meadow may need draining and the owner may need muck, and he can accomplish the first, and secure a good stock of the valuable material of which we write. There are thousands of farms where there are extensive deposits of this meterial, lying unappreciated because of the indifference of the owner, when if it could be judiciously used it could be turned to gold, or rather greenbacks, and the farms permanently improved. To many of our readers it may seem entirely unnecessary to write as we have on this subject. But while we remember that there are those who are slow to accept new ideas and practice old ones, we shall give "line upon line and precept upon precept."

FATTENING FARROW COWS.—This is often attended with great and unnecessars expence of feed, simply because the proprietor does not understand what kind of management such animals require, in order to fatten well and in the shortest possible period of time. Young farmers—and sometimes old ones, also, appear to be in doubt wether a farrow cow will or will not fatten as well while she gives milk. and many very intelligent men have continued to milk a farrow cow until she was almost ready for the butcher, and have flattered themselves that the cow was just as fat as she would have been had she not been milked. But no theory
