'Ladies' Storms Screen As Tense Drama Of Desire

Even greater than its broadway and London stage predecessor, Columbia's suspenseful new drama, "Ladies in Retirement," yesterday opened at the Capitol Theatre. The film, starring Ida Lupino and Louis Hayward, possesses not only a superb cast and matchless story but a breathlessly haunting background of hidden fury, of dark deeds and slumbering desires. "Ladies in Retirement," turbulent and emotional, packs an entertainment wallop!

Miss Lupino is seen in "Ladies in Retirement" as the actress' lonely, lovely companion. Her devotion to her sisters, her burning desire to establish them securely, the desperate lengths to which she goes, all contribute to the fascinating narrative. As an unprincipled scoundrel, not averse to embezzling, swindling or blackmail, Hayward is equally superb. The conflict between the two is captured by director Charles Vidor and cameraman George Barnes in matchless fashion.

Lester Cowan and Gilbert Miller produced the screen version of "Ladies in Retirement" which Miller produced on Broadway.

Chinese for a reconquest of Burma, and there is no question but that this is a vital problem of United Nations supply. Whether the Allies are in position to attempt the campaign at this time, however, is in considerable question.

(The very threat of a "second front" in Burma might, however, deter Japan from an attack on Siberia, or it might serve to divert some of the enemy's forces from the present battle sector in the south Pacific.

Danger to India Remote

(Most Allied quarters appear convinced that the danger of Japanese invasion of India now is remote, because of the forces which the Allies can dispose on the land frontier. Some observers believe the Japanese missed their chance for sea-borne invasion at the time when the Allied air force in eastern India was comparatively small.)

Auchinleck and Stilwell reached New Delhi soon after Wavell concluded a tour of inspection which took him across the Burma frontier. It was assumed that their discussions concerned integration of British, Indian, United States and Chinese effectives for the eventual reconquest.

Veteran Offers Land For Loan

EDMONTON, Oct. 19 — (CP)— Northern Alberta Victory Loan Headquarters today received a letter from Herb White of Whitecourt, Alta., a veteran of the First Great War, offering his 600 acres of land to raise money in Canada's $750,000,000 Victory Loan campaign.

White said that he has five quarter sections of land but no money. He is therefore prepared to support the campaign by offering all his land to the campaign committee for the purposes of raising money.

"I am a former trapper and can still go back to the bush to make a living," he said.

Two Former P. E. Island Youths Join Canadian Flyers

The Beddeford Maine Journal says:—

Gordon Lemay, son of Justin Lemay, 18 Carll avenue, Old Orchard Beach, a graduate of Mantica high school in California, and Gordon Paynter, 102 Temple street, Saco a graduate of Thornton academy in 1941, have enlisted in the Royal Canadian Air Force. They left today for Canada to enter training.

Relatives in P. E. I. will hear with interest that the Gordon Paynter mentioned above is the son of the late Bernard Paynter, Fountain Road, New London, and was taken into the States with four other brothers in 1933 by their aunt and uncle Mr. and Mrs. J. Henry Graham, of Old Orchard, Maine. Hughy is in the Draft and so is Graham. Gordon in the R.C.A.F. the baby that was, is now joining the American Navy, although only seventeen years of age. Still another "Wellington" is in the Hospital with a fractured leg which may prevent him from answering his Draft call.

Victory Loan Drive Launched In S'Side

The Third Victory Loan drive got away to a flying start in Summerside yesterday afternoon. Although the weather was anything but pleasant the streets through which the parade marched were lined with spectators and all arrangements were smoothly carried out from the time the parade left the armoury building unti it reached the Capitol theatre where the official opening of the drive took place.

In his opening remarks the chairman, His Honor Mayor Lidstone, thanked Lt.-Col. F. I. Andrew for his part in arranging to have the artillery brought to Summerside for the occasion. The solemn and impressive ceremony of presenting the Commando Dagger was held and was taken in trust by Mr. W. E. Darby, who responded on behalf of the War Finance Committee.

The Ven. Archdeacon Harrison offered up the prayer for the guidance of His Majesty the King and for the protection of the Armed Forces on land, sea and air.

The main speaker on the programme, was Right Rev. Monsignor G.J. MacLellan. He began his impressive address by outlining the principles for which the Allies are fighting, that "we are seeking to preserve our way of life, a way of life which has been fashioned by Christian principles."

He impressed upon his audience the fact that the Dominion of Canada was asking for a loan backed up by all the resources of the Dominion and that while the fighting forces were ready and willing to sacrifice their lives the civilian's share in the war effort was to provide the funds for the safe conveyance of these soldiers, sailors and airmen to the British Isles and sufficient protection and guns tanks and planes to make their invasion of the continent of Europe possible. He minced no words in reminding his hearers that that day would come and his allusion to the nearness of this war to Canadian shores even to this town, brought home forcibly to all that "we must be willing to make the necessary sacrifices at home and that in the end a peace founded on justice and charity must be ours."

His Honor Judge Shaw read the ceremonial pledge which was responded to by all present. His Honor Mayor Lidstone expressed regret that Premier Campbell who had been scheduled to address the meeting had been unavoidably detained.

After a selection by the band, Mayor Lidstone then called upon Flt. Sgt. Hinson McLeod, formerly of O'Leary, who has just returned from active service over there. Flt. Sgt. McLeod told in a gripping way of various incidents of the war which he had witnessed in Britain. He described the wanton destruction of ancient buildings in the motherland and told his audience how he had noted that while the walls were demolished the foundation on which they were built were still intact. He likened those foundations to the unshakable character of the British people, a people that Hitler would never conquer, a people whose character stood up to the fury of Goerings bombs and came out of it "chins up". He believed that "we who have the same things to fight for will endure as they have done."

The meeting then closed with the playing of the National Anthem.

Route of Parade

The parade was under the command of Capt. R.L. Mollison and was comprised of the following units: R.C.M.P. under Cpl. Watson; a detachment of the Active Army under command of Lt. L. H. Clarke of Debert Military Camp and made up as follows: 20th Field Regiment R.C.A. under Lt. A. Verdy, six other ranks of the Fusiliers De Sherbrooke with Bren Gun carriers under Lt. G.H. Labrecqui and a platoon from No. 62 C.A.B.T.C., under Lt. D. Smith; 17th Armoured Regiment Reserve under Lt. Lorne McFarlane; Air Cadets under Flt. Lt. A.R. Brennan; A.R.P. Police and Wardens; Auxiliary Fire Service; Red Cross Corps; and Summerside Fire Dept.

The parade marched off from the Armoury on a route through the principal streets of the town to the Capitol Theatre where the rally was held. The Army units spent the night in Summerside and today will visit Tignish, Alberton, and O'Leary.

Premier Urges Support Of Victory Loan

"The war has now entered its fourth year and I think it is obvious to all thinking people that the financial requirement for the providing of ships and airplanes, munitions, and for the training, feeding, and equipping of our armed forces is indeed colossal", said Premier Thane A. Campbell in a recent address on the Victory Loan campaign.

"I do not like to worry you with figures because figures are at the best dull matters and the large figures which it is now necessary to use in connection with war time expenditures are so alarming and so colossal that they are very often difficult for us common people to understand; yet in order to give you an accurate or approximately accurate picture of the financial requirements of the Dominion of Canada at the present time, I think it is necessary to refer for a few moments to the provisions of the Dominion budget for the current fiscal year ending March 31, 1943.

"That budget, you will probably recall, calls for a total outlay by the Dominion Government of three billion, nine hundred million dollars. That expenditure is classified in approximately the following ways:

"Two hundred and sixty million dollars for the Navy; one billion dollars for the Army; five hundred and eighty-five million dollars for the Air Force; one billion dollars for War Supplies to Great Britain and in addition five hundred and seventy million dollars in the ordinary current expenditures for nonwar purposes.

"The grand total, as I have mentioned is three billion nine hundred million dollars and the problem is where is this money to be obtained.

"The most obvious answer to this question and the one which perhaps suggests itself first is by taxation, and I think the tax payers of Canada will all agree that the Dominion Government through its Minister of Finance, the Honourable Mr. Ilsley has exploited every reasonable means of raising money by taxation methods during the present fiscal year. The impost of taxes hits heavily practically every class of Canadian citizens and yet we find that the estimate revenue from taxation sources during the current fiscal year is only a little more than half of the total requirements for expenditures on war costs and for other purposes. The estimated revenue from taxation receipts is two billion and fifty million dollars, leaving a balance of one billion eight hundred and fifty million dollars to be raised by some other method and what is to be that other method or what are to be the other methods?

"If we were living in Germany or any of the countries which Germany has captured or overrun, the answer would be simple: The capital and savings of the people would be confiscated by the government. There are some who suggest that this method should be applied in this country but I think their number is not large. There are others who suggest possibly an easier method, and possibly one which would appeal at least to create less hardships for the time being, that of issuing paper money which is commonly known by the name of inflation; but, Ladies and Gentlemen, in a time like this of high industrial activity, inflation is merely a method of confiscating with a sugar coating over the bitter pill, because the effect of inflation would be to confiscate by a devious method the savings and earnings of the people by the reduction in value of those savings and earnings which would be a necessary and unavoidable result of the issuing of a greater amount of paper money.

"I think that the great majority of the citizens of Canada will be glad that the Dominion Government has not embarked on either of these expedients, either forceful confiscation or the more palliative method of inflation. The alternative appears to be that which has been adopted by the Minister of Finance of borrowing money from the people of Canada on the credit of the Dominion of Canada at a moderate rate of interest, repayable after the war, and for present purposes, as I have pointed out, one billion eight hundred and fifty million dollars will be required in the current fiscal year. The minimum objective of the present loan has been set at seven hundred and fifty million dollars. Need I ask whether the people of Canada will succeed in raising this amount or not? The question is obvious. They must succeed. There can be only one answer. Those who are responsible for the soliciting of subscriptions to this loan need make no apology. They can thoroughly recommend the loan from three points of view.

"In the first place, they can recommend it as a safe and sound personal investment with the security of the Dominion of Canada, and if anyone doubts whether that security is good or whether it is sufficient to guarantee repayment, then I can only say that if the safety of our country fails then no individual investment can hope to be any good at all. The alternative is unthinkable because if from this or any other reason we fail to win the present war, then the savings and capital and investments of our private citizens would be of no avail or of no account.

"In the second place, those who solicit contributions to the loan may recommend it, as I think I have said, as the last voluntary alternative which the people of Canada have of supplying the financial requirements of the Government for war purposes. They can recommend and show to the people that it is only by contributing their savings and earnings to the Government in this way if necessary, and I believe it will be necessary, cutting down our standard of living expenditures in order to contribute to the Victory Loan. It is only in this way that the more severe measures of confiscation of property, confiscation of savings or the more palliative method of the watering down of property value and earning values by inflationary methods can be avoided.

In the third place, ladies and gentlemen, and this is the most important of all, they can recommend it as the only way, the unavoidable way, the necessary way in which the citizens of Canada can come to the assistance of our armed forces in carrying the war to a final and successful conclusion.

"Perhaps I cannot do better in closing than to refer to a statement recently made by the Honourable J. L. Ilsley, Minister of Finance. He says, 'We have a serious and grim business in hand, a struggle which calls for the best that is in us, which best includes the ultimate which everyone of us can do in the matter of saving and loaning to the country. This is the only direction in which most of us can attempt to match the valourous performance of our armed forces.'

"Yes, ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Ilsley is quite correct and it is the only direction, but even that direction involves a very small contribution and a very small sacrifice in comparison with that which is being made by the members of our armed forces and its various branches.

"The people of Prince Edward Island have in the past generously responded to appeals for contributions to Victory Loan and Auxiliary Services. We know that they will do so on this occasion also.

"Thank you, ladies and gentlemen."

Strong Memorial Window Dedicated In Summerside

At the morning service in Trinity United Church, Summerside, on Sunday, Oct. 18th, a memorial window installed in the east wall of the Church during the past week was dedicated. The service was conducted by the Rev. John Jarvie, B.A., assistant minister of the church. An outline of the service follows.

The service was opened by the calling of the people to worship followed by the invocation prayer for the Divine Presence. Then the hymn "Ye Gates Lift Up Your Heads on High" was sung followed by the prayers for the nation and the singing of the National Anthem. The congregation read responsively the selection "Let Us Now Praise Famous Men" and offered together the Gloria. Then followed the reading of the Scripture taken from Chronicles 29-10-18.

Following the reading of the Scripture Mr. Jarvie read the following extract concerning the persons to whose memory the window was erected.

"This morning we have the privilege of dedicating to the Glory of God and the beautifying of His House a window which has been erected to the memory of the Hon. William B. Strong, son of the Rev. John B. Strong who was sent to this country by the Wesleyan Missionary Society of London, England, and became the fifth minister of St. James Church, Montreal. The Hon. William Strong during his life time took an active interest in provincial affairs and held many positions of public trust, but it is for the intergrity of his character and for his spiritual life that he is especially remembered. For many years he was a faithful and active member of the church and was chairman of the Trustee Board when this building was erected. During his lifetime was often to be found occupying the pulpit and expounding the old spiritual essential truths of the Gospel which had moulded his character and given depth and vigor to his religious life. A life for him not merely of outward routine or of useful activities but of secret living in loving communion with his Saviour and Lord.

Associated with him in this memorial is his wife Sarah Jane Bousfield, for so many years his constant friend and companion. Co-operating with him in all good works and taking special interest in his labour as a local preacher. Though her nature was such as to render it all but impossible for her to make her secret spiritual life the subject of public testimony, or even of familiar conversation, yet in the privacy and confidence of the Sunday School class room there were many whose way of life was lit by the light she gave. Her life was a testimony whose meaning could not be mistaken for in all things she followed her Saviour. The memory of their daughter Mary Allison Strong, through whose generosity this window has been made possible, is perpetuated in this window also. For over 15 years she was organist of this church and gave of her time and talent in teaching in the Sunday School. Though she lived part of her time at Bedeque she always remained a member of this church and took a deep interest in its welfare as is shown in her gift of this beautiful window. As it is unveiled before us today we shall see how clearly it portrays the Christian life showing, as it does, Mary, on that first Easter morning as she discovered her risen Lord, and on the one side, John, the beloved disciple, and on the other Paul, the greatest of all missionaries. As we worship God in this sanctuary in the future these figures shall be there, constant reminders that we have come hither to rediscover, like Mary, the risen Lord, to become like John, beloved by Christ because of the beauty of our character and to gain that spiritual zeal which will send us forth, like Paul, to proclaim the word of truth among our fellows, determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and Him Crucified. The congregation then faced the rear of the church, where the window is situated and when the minister had offered prayer the window was unveiled and presented to the congregation by Mr. C. Edward Strong, brother of the Hon. William G. Strong to whose memory the window was placed in the church. The window was then dedicated to God and in memory of Hon. Wm. G. Strong, his wife Sarah J. Bousfield and their daughter Margaret Allison Strong. The solo "God Bless This House" was rendered by Sgt. William McCarten ,R.C.A.F., following which the service of public worship continued. Mr. Jarvie spoke from the words of Proverbs 29, 18, "where there is no vision the people perish." Stressing the necessity in this period of war for a perception of God and His ways, pointing out that it is not so vital that we have God on our side as that we should be on God's side seeking ever to interpret life according to His will. The service concluded with the singing of the hymn "Christ is Made the Sure Foundation" and the Benediction.

Undersea Blast Killed Commander Of Charlottetown

OTTAWA, Oct. 19 — (CP) — An undersea explosion caused the death of Lt.-Cmdr. John W. Bonner of Halifax, Officer Commanding the Canadian Corvette Charlottetown as he was swimming away from his sunken ship, survivors of that early September naval disaster told Mrs. Barry German of Gaspe, Que.

Mrs. German, the wife of Cmdr. German, Officer in charge of the naval establishment at Gaspe, told of her conversations with survivors in an interview here.

Bonner was the last to leave the ship after it was smashed in two by an enemy torpedo at the end of a two-hour battle with a submarine. He and his executive officer, whose name was not disclosed, swam side by side after getting clear.

The executive officer was not sure what caused the blasts, whether depth charges dropped by other Canadian ships or something in the Charlottetown, but he felt it and escaped without injury. Looking around, however, he saw Bonner who before had been swimming on his side, floating face down.

The Charlottetown waged its battle against the U-boat in a fog, attempted to ram it and hit it with depth charges. After the torpedo hit the crew had just two minutes to get away before the two halves up-ended and sank.

Nine lives were lost, 14 of the crew were injured and 39 were rescued unhurt.

Mrs. German said three of the survivors who could not be accommodated in hospital were looked after at her home and from them she learned details of the action. They were coated with oil which did not come off even with scrubbing in warm baths.

"That night" she said, "was terrible. There was nothing we could do but listen to those poor boys' nightmares as they lived the sinking over again. One cried out orders. My daughter and I sat on his bed and tried to bring him out of it. But it was useless.

"He lay as stiff as a board with his eyes closed tightly and we could hear all the orders he had given that day as they were hunting the submarine, mixed up with abandoning the ship. At the hospital it was the same, but they had some who could not sleep from the hiccoughs that came from the internal injuries.

"I want to tell you that those boys had a wonderful spirit. All of them were crazy to know if the other escort ships had got the submarine. As far as we know there was no certainty but the contact faded out after three hours of depth-charging and there was diesel oil all over the water. That made them feel a little better about their Commanding Officer and shipmates."

She told how one burnt and battered seaman who died during the night lay with nurses about his bed as his eyes grew glazed. Shortly before he died he muttered "If I could only have another shot at them."

Time Mixup In N.B. County

EDMUNDSTON, N.B., Oct. 19 — (CP) — The post office clock here is still ticking on Atlantic Daylight time but Edmundston and the County of Madawaska, as well as Grand Falls and adjacent parishes in Victoria County, are observing Atlantic Standard Time.

Decision to revert to Standard Time here was made by the Town Council at request of citizens representing the local pulp and paper industry, school board, farmers and the population generally.

An Edmundston-sponsored resolution favoring Standard Time was endorsed recently by the Union of New Brunswick municipalities which decided to seek Legislation for this at the next sitting of the Provincial Legislature.

The Canadian Army training centre here also reverted to Standard Time.

Business Faces New Restrictions

By James McCook
Canadian Press Staff Writer

OTTAWA, Oct. 19—(CP)—The strings of wartime economy were drawing tighter about Canadian business today, with the Wartime Prices and Trade Board and National Selective Service officials engaged in trimming non-essentials and putting workers where they are most urgently needed.

Ottawa sources revealed:

1. Prices board wholesale and retail administrators are discussing manpower economies with representatives of the various trades who compose advisory committees. Before a program of curtailment is developed—and this program may result in some stores closing—the recommendations from these discussions will go to the prices board's industrial division.

2. Policy of assisting plants which have to close down through the development of a pooling fund is likely to be extended beyond the newsprint industry, where it now applies, to other branches of business affected by war economy orders.

A prices board spokesman said it was impossible to estimate how many stores or other business plants might be affected by the far-reaching orders designed to funnel labor and supplies into a concentrated war effort.

Stranger In Shady Gulch

By Denver Bardwell

"He's sorta begging me to get on to supper. He's pretty hungry, I guess."

"Must be worse than that," Tom Lally commented "when he goes in for trying to bite off men's arms."

"He's been sorta spitting, disgusted like," Radkin said, "ever since he had to bite that polecat for roping him. He don't bother people that don't bother him."

"Look here, sheriff," young Lally said angrily, "I think you ought to do your duty. I've been talking with our men and they promised me that, if you kill the dog, they won't ride too rought on this fellow."

"Why, Tom Lally!" Arlene Waller exclaimed, her dark eyes flashing. Anybody can see the dog isn't vicious. He's the most magnificent dog I've ever seen!" She turned to Radkin. "Would he let me rub his ears like you're doing?"

"He'll do more than that," said Radkin, then commanded; "Shake hands with the lady and tip your hat, Caesar."

Caesar sat up on his shoulders, held out his right paw to the girl, and made a gesture with his left paw as if lifting a hat from his head. Arlene shook his paw, and laughed delightedly.

"Why, he's wonderful!" she cried. "How I wish he were mine! He—Oh, I didn't mean that," she added quickly, seeing the look on Radkin's face. She flushed in embarrassment. "Well . . . I must be starting home."

She turned to go, but Tom Lally caught her arm.

"Wait a second, Arlene. I'll buy the brute for you if you really want such a vicious animal around. What'll you take for him, feller?" He ran a hand into his pocket, frowning at Radkin.

"Never mind, Tom," Arlene said quickly. "I'm sure, if the dog is for sale, my father would buy him for me."

"And him not able to get a loan—uh—Oh, well, all right." Tom stumbled over his words, seeing the sudden flush of anger on Arlene's face.

"Miss Waller," Radkin said, as she again started away, "I'm heading for the MW to talk some business with your father. Won't you let me ride with you?"

"I'm riding home with Miss Waller, cowpoke," Tom Lally said aggressively.

Radkin didn't look at him, but said to Arlene, "In that case, Miss Waller, I'll be along later."

"Mr. Lally is not going home with me," she coolly denied. "If you're going out to see Father, I'll be leaving in fifteen minutes from that rack yonder where my bay pony is standing."

She gave Tom Lally a cold glance and walked away.

Tom's face was wrathfully white as he turned to the sheriff.

"Matt, I'm going to tell my father all about it if you don't kill that dangerous dog at once! Are you, or are you not, going to kill him?"

"Go on and tell your dad," Mat Olds replied huffily. "I don't tell Thomas Lally how to run his bank or the Half Diamond, and I'm not taking orders on how to run my job!"

Young Lally bit his lip, then strode away.

Olds turned to Radkin. "Son, I'm scared you're horning into more'n you know about, but it's your mess of stew if you don't take my advice. All I want tonight is to keep danger from Mark Waller's girl, which'd sure trot close if she rode outa town with you. You slide out the back way from the stable. You can hit the MW road east of town where it turns north over Thumb Creek bridge. I'll tell Arlene you'll meet her there. Then I'll hafta keep tabs on that wild bunch up at the saloon."
