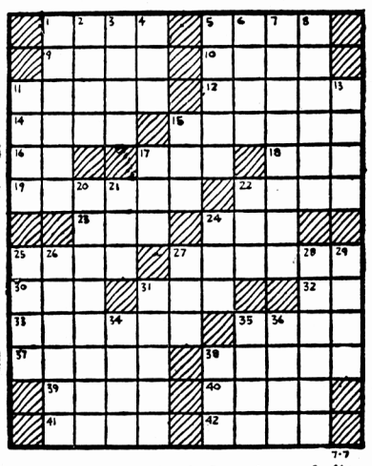
Yesterday's Answer



DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE—Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

A Cryptogram Quotation

C N L R D Q L D P C N L H J D G T G W M L H,
W S T C N L M B V R C A Y W T S L H H D F
J W G — Q V G M V R.

A sorry sight it is to see
When neighbors never can agree.
—Old Mother Nature.

Young Coyote watched Buzztail the Rattlesnake slowly glide down in an old underground house on the edge of Yapville the Prairie Dog town. He wondered. He wondered a great deal. He had just had his first meeting with Buzztail. He had been creeping up behind that raised doorstep of the old house hoping to get near enough to one of those Prairie Dogs to catch him. He hadn't seen Buzztail until the latter's warning rattle had sent him jumping back in such haste that he had almost turned a back somersault.

That Snake with the queer rattling tail hadn't looked dangerous, yet Young Coyote had from the first sound of that rattle had a strange feeling of fear. Buzztail had said that he was one of the Poison People and could kill any one with a single bite. It was hard to believe that any one could do that, but something inside told him that it was true, and that if ever again he should hear that buzzing rattle he would be wise to heed the warning and watch his step.

"I wonder if he lives down in there any if any one else is living there," thought he, "I wouldn't like having him for a neighbor. No, sir, I wouldn't want him for a neighbor. I would be afraid. I don't know why, but I would."

He flattened himself down in some tall weeds between which he could peep out and watch hopefully for the Prairie Dog folk to come out. Not one was in sight now, but he could hear them scolding down in their homes into which they had scampered when he had shown himself as he jumped back at Buzztail's warning.

By and by a head appeared here and a head appeared there. More heads appeared. Then all over Yapville there was much running about by old and young alike, visiting back and forth and gossiping. Could you have seen them you wouldn't have guessed that only a short time before all had been racing headlong for their homes in sudden fright. Now they seemed to have forgotten it completely. That is, most of them did. But Young Coyote noticed that all the time a few of the older and wisest ones were sitting up on their mounds watching. They seemed to take turns and there never was an instant when no one was watching.

He sighed softly, too softly to be heard by any one near. Getting a Prairie Dog dinner was going to take a lot of patient waiting. It would be useless to try to creep up on that dinner. He would have to wait right where he was until it came near enough to him to be caught.

He noticed that everybody kept away from the old house into which Buzztail the Rattlesnake had gone. Buzztail was out on the doorstep again. On the doorstep of another house sat Sandy the Burrowing Owl. Mrs. Sandy joined him there. She had come from inside that house in the ground.

"I wonder if they live there or are just visiting there," thought the patient watcher. "It is a queer place for birds to be living. Of course a lot of the bird folks spend much time on the ground, but those two act as if they live in the ground as well as on it. I wonder if they do."

He was sure they did when a moment later two young owls came out and sat on the doorstep beside their parents. No one paid any attention to them. But he noticed after a while that only the full grown of their neighbors, too big to have anything to fear, came very near. The young and smaller ones kept away from that house just as they did from the old house where Buzztail was. Of course he never had heard that Prairie Dogs and Owls and Rattlesnakes live together happily. If he had heard it he would have known that it isn't true. They may be, and often are, neighbors, but they are unneighborly neighbors. They are not friends at all. It is whispered that Buzztail and Mr. and Mrs. Sandy could tell if they would why there are fewer little Prairie Dogs in the neighborhood of their homes than in other parts of the village.

BOOMERANG

A defensive false-card play in today's deal turned out to be a boomerang.

South dealer.
North-South vulnerable.

North: ♠ 9 5 3 ♥ 7 4 ♦ A 9 8 6 3 2 ♣ Q 5
West: ♠ 10 8 2 ♥ 6 5 3 ♦ K Q 10 ♣ K 9 8 4
East: ♠ K J 6 4 ♥ A J 9 8 ♦ 2 ♦ 7 ♣ 6 3 2
South: ♠ A Q 7 ♥ K Q 10 ♦ J 5 4 ♣ A J 10 7

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 N T	Pass	2 ♦	2 ♥
2 N T	Pass	3 ♦	Pass
3 N T	Dble.	Pass	Pass
Pass

South was a little ambitious in refusing to heed the warning of North's three diamond bid — but perhaps he knew that the defender would help him out!

West opened his top heart, and East correctly played the nine. South won with the ten and led a low diamond. West, hoping to make South feel that the diamonds were going to break, put up the queen—but the only one he fooled was his own partner! Declarer made West a present of this trick, and when a second heart was played, East decided that there was no use in holding off any longer. He feared that the entire diamond suit was now established, so he put up the heart ace and shifted to spades, hoping against hope that he would "find his partner" in the suit. Actually, declarer's spade queen held the trick, and now South could well afford to pass another diamond as a safety play.

It is understandable that West should have wished to give the enemy a false sense of security about the diamond break, but his false-card play of the diamond queen instead of the ten-spot could scarcely fail to throw East off the track. If East had not been so afraid of an avalanche of diamonds, he almost surely would have ducked the second round of hearts as well as the first, to leave a heart in West's hand for communication. Observe that this line of defense, forcing out South's heart stoppers immediately, would have been wholly effective. Perhaps East should have caught on to the fact that his partner really had two diamond toppers instead of one, but he could not be blamed for shaping his defense to meet an apparently desperate situation.
