The Old Order Changes

By DAVID LYALL

"I'd like to thresh some of your arguments out with you, Mr. Freeland. It might be beneficial for us both."

"Well, I'm not minding," assented Freeland with his slow smile. "I've learned my lessons in a hard school, but I've got them, Mr. Caulfield."

"Apparently, what is troubling me is whether it will be a good thing for the town to have an avowed socialist in the Mayor's chair."

"If they don't like my views, they haven't got very long to thole them," said Freeland with a short laugh. "But you've got hold of the wrong word, Mr. Caulfield. I'm only socialist as far as trying to get better conditions for everybody. I don't belong to the divide-and-divide-again brigade that spouts at the Basin."

"I don't see much difference, I'm afraid," observed Caulfield dryly. "And what about your daughter marrying one of the idle rich, who have ground the faces of the poor? You're in rather an anomalous position, judged from the ordinary man's standpoint."

"I'm not responsible for my future son-in-law. He's very well able to conduct his own affairs," observed Freeland with a tranquil and rather tender smile.

"That may be, but you're sanctioning his conduct of them when you give your daughter to him."

"My daughter's twenty-six and a half years old, Mr. Caulfield, and perfectly able to manage her own affairs. But don't be too sure about Major Manning. It's just possible that he may give a lead to the country yet. Good night, and thank you for your support to-night. I'll try and deserve it, and we'll have plenty of time to thresh out these vexed questions between now and a twelve-month come November. Even a Mayor with socialist leanings doesn't get his own way in a Corporation of eighteen members."

With which parting shot, delivered with a laugh, Freeland departed, leaving Mr. Caulfield to puff up the hill to his red brick mansion, slightly confused in his mind and apprehensive of troubled times ahead for the Corporation as well as the leges of Basingfold.

Freeland found Harriet alone in the dining-room, busy over a very dainty part of Mary's trousseau. These few weeks of happy anticipation of what she regarded as the greatest and most benign event in her family life had given Mrs. Freeland a kind of bloom. She had been very pretty in her youth, with very regular features, and a beautiful, clear, soft colour. As she looked up to greet her spouse, her smile was radiant as a girl's and he did not fail to notice it.

"You're looking fine, Harriet," he said on the spur of the moment. "Younger and bonnier than ever."

The compliment pleased her. Freeland had never been too lavish of them. Scotchmen are not born that way; they have to learn the lover's and the courtier's arts with more travail of soul than other men. But

Save The Birds

II HOW BIRDS ARE PROTECTED

For many years birds have been protected in Canada by the various provinces which make their own law. In the United States the same method was employed, but for many reasons this system did not work very successfully for these birds which migrate from one country to the other, and are known as migratory birds, comprise nearly all that are of value to man. Notably exceptions are the Ruffed Grouse (commonly known as "Partridge") and the Prairie Chicken, both of which are still protected only provincially, not being migratory birds.

Therefore, in August, 1916, after several years of untiring effort on the part of the leading bird lovers and true sportsmen in Canada and the United States these two countries signed a solemn agreement or treaty to protect all birds considered worthy of protection, which twice annually cross the border. This agreement is known in Canada as "The Migrator, Birds Convention" and it is already working out so well that it will in all probability be extended indefinitely.

All the birds that are protected by this treaty are named in the posters that have been distributed throughout Canada so that any one may know it is unlawful to kill the useful birds at any time, to take their eggs or to harm them in any way. It is also unlawful to take the eggs of game birds or to molest them on their breeding grounds and they may only be killed for food or sport during the open season which the law provides.

Milliners are not allowed to offer for sale or even have in their possession the feathers, which used to be so much worn by women on their hats, or any other parts of the birds protected by the Act.

Some people do not like this new law, but it is because they are either very selfish or because they do not understand. The aim and purpose of this law is not to stop legitimate shooting, but rather to make it better in the future and for all time, so that when you boys grow up you will not have to be content with listening to your fathers talk about the good shooting that used to be, but can still enjoy a good day's sport with your own gun.

Do not forget that the boys who disturb or kill birds protected by this Act, either by stone-throwing or shooting with the .22 rifle may be punished and so may the boys who molest the nests of protected birds. By respecting this law you will be doing your country a service and at the same time will provide yourself a good citizen.

The birds which are protected under the Act are divided into three classes: Migratory insectivorous, Migratory game, and Migratory non-game birds.

We are not allowed to kill any of the birds in the first or last class at any time of the year, but in case of the game birds certain months of the year are thrown open, and in those months sportsmen may shoot game birds for food and sport. But among this class there are certain kinds of birds which for various reasons are more or less in danger of extermination and the authorities of both countries are very wisely giving such birds a chance to increase again by protecting them for a period of years. One of these is the Elder Duck or "Sea Duck" as it is often called is specially protected. The Curlew and many other shore birds are protected throughout the year. Among this class will be found the small sandpipers, commonly called "peeps" which used to swarm on our beaches in the autumn and which still come to some sections in great flocks.

SANCTUARIES

The Dominion and Provincial Governments have set aside certain pieces of marshland, woodland, lakes and islands, in different parts of Canada where birds may breed undisturbed under careful protection. These reservations are called Bird Sanctuaries. A number of bird lovers also have made their wood lots and farms into bird sanctuaries and these will do a great deal towards increasing our useful birds.

The balance of this lesson to be taken up studying the protected birds named in the Poster.

Another Reason for the enormous increase in sales of Red Rose Tea

Great numbers of people who have been using cheap bulk teas, changed to RED RED ROSE (Red Label) when we reduced the price from 75c. lb. to 60c. lb.

They found that 1-2 lb. of Red Rose costing 30c, goes nearly as far as a whole pound of so-called cheap bulk tea.

And it is a pleasure to drink Red Rose Tea some real tea taste to it.

Nostrils tainted by Catarrh Quickly Spread disease

If your nose is unclean, or even tainted with the germs that cause colds and catarrh, you are likely to spread diseased conditions to other members of your family.

Most colds start in the nose. Stop them in the nose and you avoid lots of trouble later on. The most effective disinfectant is the healing vapor of Catarrhazone.

The medicated vapors of Catarrhazone spread a thin film of healing oils over the entire breathing apparatus; it cleans away nasty discharges, stops splitting and sneezing, does away with headache, coughing, throat trouble and catarrh. To prevent winter ills, to stop sniffles, to heal and strengthen the nose and throat, use Catarrhazone. Complete outfit you can secure in any drug store for one dollar. Smaller size 50c.

he laughed at that for he was very happy to know that Manning loved Mary as he did, the kind of love which lasts, growing deeper and more enduring with every day. "They'll be happy, lass. They're a wee different from the rest of us."

"Mrs. Manning had written or taken some notice," she said. "Mary feels it even more than Geoffrey. I had the greatest work preventing her writing to her too humbly. She did write, you know, but, of course, she never got any answer."

"Leave them alone, lass. It'll come right in the end."

With that he took out the pipe of peace and proceeded to light it up. "As I'm showing you things, I may as well show you what I bought with part of the money you gave me."

She replaced Mary's possessions and went off upstairs to her own room, returning in a few minutes swathed in a beautiful stole of Russian sable and a large pillow muff, delicate soft things, against which her fair colouring showed up very well.

"Very nice, my dear. How much did you pay for them?"

"Five hundred pounds at Victory's in Manchester. They only came yesterday, they had much difficulty in matching the skins."

"Five hundred pounds!" He looked a trifle stunned. It seemed to him an extravagant sum to pay for any article of personal adornment. Still, he had made a free gift of the money to his wife, and he did not propose to put her out of love with her purchase.

At the same time a scarcely imperceptible sigh escaped his lips. "You don't like it, Bob?"

"Oh, yes, I do like it, and it suits you grand. When do you wear this, then?"

"First time, next Thursday at Mary's wedding, and all through the winter whenever the Mayoress has anything to do. I'll uphold your position, Bob, you can be sure of that!"

"I'm sure," he smiled back rather absently. As she departed, smuggling close to her new possession like a child enraptured of a new toy, when learned, there is a quality which is rare and satisfying fruit.

"Now where have you been, Bob, to get such a turn of the tongue," she asked gaily. "Tell me quickly what happened at the Council."

"Oh, they've elected me, lass, and I've been deaving Josiah Caulfield with some of my views, putting the fear of death into him. He'll maybe be writing a letter to the Gazette on the head of it, I wouldn't wonder."

"Never mind that old fossil," she said joyfully. "So you're to be Mayor and I'll be kept busy this winter! I hear all kinds of things coming on that we'll need to patronize."

"Aye, maybe. Where's Mary and Geoffrey?"

"Oh, they've gone the usual way across to Granny's," she answered, without, however, evincing any jealousy or irritation. Now that one great ambition of her life was about to be realized she could afford to ignore the lesser ones.

"And that limmer, Bee?"

"Oh, Bee is over at the Lloyds. If Mary and Geoffrey had waited a little longer we might have had a double wedding and saved you some expense. Only Bee will want more of a flutter. I'm so sorry Mary won't even have a proper wedding frock. I must show you the ridiculous thing she's going to wear next Thursday. It came by the post to-night."

She stepped into a big cupboard with shelves, which opened out of the dining-room, and which she used as a kind of private store-room. From its soft wrappings of tissue paper she retrieved a coat and frock of soft dove grey, very plain, but exquisitely cut.

"It's very nice, plain and serviceable. I like the colour. You wore a white frock, Harriet. Well I mind the day!"

"Why, of course, every woman who feels like a bride wants to look like one. Yes, it's very pretty. It's a three-piece garment, don't you see—Bob, are you looking at it?—and look what exquisite work is on the bodice. It's very elegant of its kind, but it isn't it."

If it pleases Mary, it'll do; and as for Geoffrey, he'll not be caring what she has on. He's got it badly, hasn't he?"

The regular monthly meeting of Pleasant Circle Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Urvile Large on Jan. 9th with eleven members present. Meeting opened with Ode, roll call followed answered with the name of some modern woman of interest and why. Minutes were read and approved. The secretary reported $3.00 for aprons and fancy work sold at E. V. McLeod's store. Both school and sick committee gave reports $2.00 was paid for a new minute book. Some discussion then took place on holding Valentine Social and it was decided to hold the social on the same evening as the regular meeting, at the home of Mrs. Geo. McKay.

It was moved by Mrs. John Walker and seconded by Miss Edith Boulter, that a vote of thanks be extended to two of our absent members, Miss Flossie Large and Miss Maymie Cameron for lovely gifts of fancywork they donated to the Institute. A reading was given by Mrs. John Dawson on "How important is my appearance" One by Mrs. John Walker on "House and Home". Next meeting to be held at the home of Mrs. George McKay. Roll call was answered with "some humorous story of courtship or marriage". Meeting closed with singing "It's a good time to get acquainted". Lunch was then served by the hostess. Receipts for the evening $1.55.

Lame Back And Swollen Feet Were Her Trouble

New Brunswick Lady Was Hardly Able To Do Her Work

Mrs. H. Calpitts Used Dodd's Kidney Pills With Beneficial Results.

Salisbury, N. B., Feb. 7.—(Special)—"I had a lame back and was hardly able to do my work," writes Mrs. Henry Calpitts, who lives at this place. "My feet and hands would also swell until they felt stiff. I took three boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills and have not felt the least sign of it since. I have also given them to one of my children who suffered with involuntary urination and they proved very good."

The road of good health lies through the kidneys. If they are kept well and strong, all the impurities are strained out of the blood. If they are weak and out of order the impurities stay in the blood and disease is the sure result.

Dodd's Kidney Pills keep the kidneys in good condition to do their work of cleaning and purifying the blood.

Dodd's Kidney Pills demonstrate their worth in the most serious forms of kidney disease, such as Backache, Rheumatism, Bladder and Urinary Troubles.
