A Pontiac car driven by a prominent business man of this city, was coming up Rochford Street at a slow rate of speed when a truck, heavily laden and having two children in the front seat beside the driver suddenly appeared from Kent Street going at a terrific rate. The truck driver saw it was too late to apply the brakes, so he swerved to the left and ran up over the curb. He narrowly avoided hitting a tree, but continued on his way without apparently doing any damage except to give the children with him a shaking and a good scare.

The Gallant Forty Twa

(By Rev. W. Bruce Muir.)

The appearance of "The Garb of Old Gaul" upon the streets of Charlottetown during these glorious summer days, is surely an event of more than passing interest. Especially to those with Scottish blood in their veins, the sight of the tartan must have come like a cooling breeze from the glens and straths of "Bonnie Scotland." Those strapping lads in arms, carrying themselves so well, in their newly donned uniforms, must have stirred the hearts of every patriotic Scotsman, and made them feel that they belong to a glorious succession which throughout the ages, from the military standpoint, has done so much to build up the greatness of the British Empire. The noble regiment whose uniform those fine specimens of the youth of P. E. Island now wear, has nobly taken its part in every war in which the Empire has been engaged during the last three hundred years.

It is the first formed of all the Highland regiments, and owes its existence to John, second Earl of Athole. In the middle of the seventeenth century, the Highlands of Scotland were in a state of great commotion and John, second Earl of Athole, in 1668, was granted a commission "to raise and keep such a number of men as he shall think fit" to be a constant guard for securing peace in the Highlands. The term "black" which distinguishes them from all the other Highland regiments arose from the dark color of their tartan uniforms, and was used to distinguish them from the regular troops who were called "the Red Soldiers." Just at this time, the agitation was beginning to unite the Parliaments of England and Scotland. There was strong opposition north of the Tweed to any such union. On the sword blades of the period there was inscribed the motto: "Prosperity to Scotland and no Union." In the antiquarian museum at Edinburgh, these sword blades may still be seen. The controversy became intense; old animosities were revived, and strange coalitions were formed. Cameronians and Jacobites who hated each other so much, hated the Union more, and combined, although in vain, to overthrow it. During this time, three companies of the Black Watch were formed and wholly armed with firearms. They were recruited principally from the Macdonalds, the Grants, the Campbells, and the Munroes, and were first used to enforce the disarming act, and to prevent political meetings of a seditious kind, and also to prevent depredations. Having been of considerable use for these local purposes, the whole of the companies were formed into the 42nd Regiment under the command of the Earl of Crawford in 1739. Strange to say, the Earl of Crawford was a Lowlander, and it became necessary to adopt an arbitrary pattern of tartan, which has ever since been known as the 42nd, or Black Watch tartan.

The regiment first saw foreign service in the war of the Austrian Succession, and on "the Fields of Flanders," especially at the Battle of Fontenoy, distinguished themselves greatly in company with the Irish Brigade in the French army, so much sung by Irish poets. Since that day, the 42nd have taken part in every war in which the Empire has been engaged, and have shown their mighty prowess on many a hard won battlefield. In the Peninsular War, at Vittoria, Badahoz, and Salamancha, it was the red heckle of the 42nd Highlanders that led the way to victory. In the Crimea, in the Indian mutiny, in Egypt and in South Africa, no regiment covered itself with greater glory than the gallant "Forty Twa."

In connection with its glorious history, a notable event took place in Dunblane Cathedral in 1872. The officers of the corps decided to erect a monument in that fine old sanctuary to the memory of the men who had fallen in battle from the creation of the regiment till the close of the Indian Mutiny in 1859, and a magnificent monument was erected in the Cathedral. A fine memorial cairn was also erected by public subscription in a field near Aberfeldy and was unveiled on the 13th of November, 1887, on the spot where the regiment first assembled in 1739. With such inspiration around them, one does not wonder that when the late war with Germany broke out every man of eligible age volunteered for the front from the parish of Aberfeldy, and another monument to their memory now stands not far from the spot where the gallant 42nd were first raised. It bears the inscription underneath the names of the gallant men who sacrificed everything for home and country.

"All that returned of them was their fame." In other words every man who left Aberfeldy, at the call of duty, sleeps beneath "the Poppies in Flanders Fields."

With all due respect and reverence for our other great Scottish regiments, whose traditions and records are equally great, let us today, in view of the event which has just taken place in Prince Edward Island lay a tribute of praise at the feet of those who have been instrumental in having restored to Prince Edward Island as their regimental dress, the kilt, the sporran and the plaid. Let us hope that the day is not far distant when the P. E. I. Highlanders will don the busby and the red heckle, said to be the finest full-dress uniform in the British Army. Let the men also remember their glorious traditions, and if the hour comes, as come it may, we feel assured, that the call of duty will not find them wanting.

Trust in God, but keep your powder dry, and call ever to remembrance these noble words often sung at banquets of your noble regiment:

"From morn to night, we fought our fight and at the set of sun, Stood conquerors on Inkermann—our soldiers battle won."

SUPREME COURT

A.—I was in a hurry. I did not say much.

Q.—Did you say you needed a separator and ask for time to buy it?

A.—I said I had to go about my business.

Q.—Did you have time to look him over?

A.—I looked him over all I wanted to.

Asked by Counsel to describe Mr. Gallant, witness said he was a man of dark complexion, with a black moustache. He was not sure about his eyes. He had on a dark brown suit but no overcoat.

As to the car, witness said it was a Ford runabout. He described the way in which the machine was carried on the car.

Questioned regarding the box, witness stated that he might have said the box was around for a couple of years.

Asked, regarding the sign, why he did not nail it up outside instead of keeping it in his parlour, witness replied he feared it would get rusty if he did so, and he wanted to return it to Mr. Gallant in good condition.

Asked by Mr. Saunders why, when arrested and Mr. Trenholm produced no warrant he did not refuse to go, witness replied that Trenholm produced the paper immediately after he made the arrest.

Q.—Why, when you were looking up Gallant's name in the car book, did you not just look for Abraham Gallant rather than Joe, John or Tom Gallant—Abraham was his first name you said didn't you?

A.—I wasn't sure; I thought that was it.

In any event, he could find no Abraham Gallant in the car book.

Joe Gallant was the name most like it.

He only found, in the course of his searches two men who looked like Abraham Gallant.

Asked by Council whether he had told Mr. Trenholm first of all that the man who took out the separator got in by a ladder placed to the window, and then that he likely entered by the door, which any fifteen cent key would open, witness replied that he did not remember.

The witness was then re-examined by Mr. Bell. To him he said that he was in such a hurry to get the cattle out of his grain at the time of Mr. Gallant's visit, that he did not notice details of his dress and apearance. In reply to further questioning, he said he found no Gallants at Brackley Point. The nearest one was at Commercial Cross and he thought there were some at Oyster Bed.

Witness said the first he knew about the tea in the hay in his farm was when Lorne Weeks came in to the jail and told him it had been found there.

At the time of the Sheriff's sale, there were three articles on his premises not his property—namely, two cars and the separator. The cars were put in the list for sale, but the owners appeared and swore to their property.

He said he was also visited in the jail by Mr. Saunders.

Re-Cross examined by Mr. Saunders, witness was shown a statement. Questioned about it he said it was signed by himself and was true. He was then shown a second statement, signed by himself, which he likewise said was true.

The statements had reference to some transactions between Weeks and persons involved in previous cases.

Mr. Saunders read these statements. They were objected to by Mr. Mathieson by the defence.

Mr. Saunders stated that he read them, because his visit to the jail was brought out in direct examination. These statements were then obtained, and for that reason he had read them and asked that they be received in evidence.

Mr. Mathison submitted that the statements were prejudicial to the character of the accused witness, and were not rlevant to the case.

Mr. Saunders felt that while he had a right to have them in as evidence, still he would not press the matter.

The Court ruled accordingly that they be not received as evidence.

Lorne Weeks, examined by Mr. Mathieson testified that he had seen the separator at Frank Weeks' place. On asking where he got it, he testified that it belonged to his sister Myrtle. He corroborated the evidence of the accused about his visit to the jail. He testified to finding the tea among the hay in the barn of the prisoner. That was this spring, when Frank was in jail. After hauling the first load of hay they saw no tea. When they went to take the second load, they saw the packages. Two or three weeks later they hauled some more but there was no more tea. Witness said that he left the tea there.

Cross examined by Mr. Saunders, witness stated that the prisoner was his uncle. He did not count the packages. He told Frank of finding it three or four days afterwards. He told no one about the tea but Frank. A long while after he found the tea he heard that Kenneth MacLeod had lost the tea. He did not know where the tea came from. He told his father about it. It was on top of the hay, down by the wall. The first load of hay he took he saw nothing. Then, when he came back for the second load, he saw Herbert Ross climbing down with his overcoat over his arm. Then, when he went back into the loft he saw the tea.

Reexamined by Mr. Mathieson, witness stated he didn't know the tea was in the loft when he saw Ross coming down. He only found it afterwards.

David Snow was next called in evidence but, though subpoenaed personally by Mr. Bell, he did not appear.

This closed the evidence for the Defence.

Mr. Bell next addressed the jury on behalf of the accused, claiming that the Crown had not produced one scrap of evidence to show that Frank Weeks stole the separator. And this the Crown was obliged to prove beyond a reasonable doubt. He contended that the story of the accused as to how he had obtained the separator was a reasonable one. He said that, if Pope Abbott (who had been present when Gallant arrived with the separator) Weeks would not be here today. He then went on to review the evidence in the case, stressing the points favourable to the accused.

Attorney General Saunders followed for the Crown. He commented on the unsatisfactory nature of the evidence given by the prisoner, testifying on his own behalf, saying that he believed a patient at Falconwood could invent a more plausible explanation of how he might have secured the separator than did the accused. After reviewing the evidence, with emphasis on the points which tended to establish the case of the crown, and the inconsistencies in the story advanced by the defence, he concluded by requesting the jury to give the prisoner the benefit of any reasonable doubt about the matter, and asking them to discharge their duty according to their conscience.

The Court, owing to the lateness of the hour did not address the jury but adjourned the matter until 10 a. m. today.

Summerville Races TO-DAY

ABEGWEITS, 6 S'SIDE, 4

The exhibition game between Summerside and Abegweits at the latter's grounds last evening resulted in a win for the Abegweits by a score of 6 to 4.

Last night's game, although devoid practically of any heavy hitting on either nine, was one of the best games seen here this season.

It was anybody's tilt from beginning to end, with the Western team forcing the Abbies in every inning and remained a threat until the last ball was pitched. The Abbie lead in the early part of the game was the undoing of the visitors; four runs in the third giving the locals a 5 to nil lead, was too much for the former to overcome. They scored two runs in the fourth and two in the fifth, while the Abbies counted again in the eighth.

Monkley pitched the full issue for Summerside and turned in one of the best games of his career, while Jack Wright on the receiving end worked as of old.

"Happy" Hobbs opened hostilities on the hill for the Abegweits and turned in an excellent five inning. He was going so well the fans were surprised to see him pulled in the sixth. However, Carbonell, the relief hurler was never in trouble and mounded equally as well as "Happy".

If the calibre of ball continues through the Island league series as well as that which was turned out last night, the players and management of both clubs need not worry very much over the attendance.
