Girl On His Hands

By JOSEPH CHADWICK

CHAPJTER XIX

Virginia saw her uncle coming toward the bar. He was beaming and she knew he was pleased because she was with John.

He said, "I see you two have taken my advice and made up. That's fine!"

"Yes," Virginia told him. "We've buried the hatchet — though not very deep." She smiled at John. "You may go back to Harriet now. I'm in safe hands."

John rose. "All right—I guess I'd better. I'll see you later."

Virginia watched him walk away. It occurred to her that it would be sensible for her to fall out of love with Arturo and in love with John. But, after all, love wasn't something that could be manipulated.

She saw Nick Jefferies watching her from the other end of the bar.

Turning to her uncle, she said, "There's a man here in pursuit of me, Uncle Steve, and I'm in no mood tonight to be pursued. Stay with me, please."

"Of course, Ginny. Who is bothering you?"

"Oh, Nick Jeffries."

"Well, I can handle him." Mitchell grinned. "So you've changed your mind about John Stacy—have decided to forgive him?"

"In a way, yes. He's rather nice. You're smart to push him along in your business, Uncle Steve. He's clever."

"I'm going to push him along all right. Maybe, when I want to retire, I'll need a man like him to step into my shoes."

"My goodness, you do think highly of him! Look here—are you trying to sell me a bill of goods?"

Mitchell chuckled. "Maybe I am, my dear. If I'd trust my business to a man, I'd also trust my dearest possession to him."

"Well, I'll have some say in the matter, you know. I'll never marry a man I don't love."

"Then fall in love with him. Why not? Some girl will."

"Some girl already has," Virginia said. "Harriet Jordan is all starry-eyed when she looks at him. And I'll bet she's clever as well as pretty. One fine day, you'll hear that Mr. John Stacy and Miss Harriet Jordan are engaged."

That brought a frown to the face of Stephen Mitchell. And his frown made Virginia laugh.

John found Harriet, and took her out onto the clubhouse veranda. The music from within reached them softly. A silvery moon was in the sky.

She had her hand on his arm. She clung a little to him.

"John, I like all this," she said earnestly. "You can't know how much. I'm really thrilled."

"I'm glad you like it," said John.

He was a little surprised to find that he himself was not particularly impressed with his surroundings, though it was as much a novelty to him as to Harriet to move in high social circles. A month or two ago, he would have been impressed, but that trip to Rio had changed him—had made him feel like a man of the world.

He thought of Rio—and of Virginia. He thought of what he had just said to her at the bar. She had seemed contrite, and he had foolingly opened up his heart to her again. He kept playing right into her hands. She was doubtless laughing at him again now. Well, let her laugh!

Harriet had said something, but he hadn't heard her words.

He said, I'm sorry—I was thinking of something."

"I said that I saw Virginia Dane snatch you up just after you stopped dancing with me."

"Oh — yes. The man she was dancing with wanted to play Romeo. She wanted to get away from him, so she signaled to me."

They went down the veranda steps and along a gravel walk that led across a terrace.

"Have you known her long."

"Well, yes—and no."

"That's a funny answer! What do you mean?"

John ran a finger around the inside of his stiff collar. He felt uncomfortable talking about Virginia. He was afraid he'd show how he felt about her.

He said, "I first met her six years ago—just casually. Then, I met her again on my trip to Rio."

Harriet said, "Oh!"

There was something in her tone that made John look at her curiously. However, they were now in the shadow of a tree, and he could see nothing of her expression.

They halted beyond the tree. John took out a cigarette but, instead of lighting it, he found himself crushing it between his fingers. He strove to get Virginia out of his thoughts. He had to!

Turning to Harriet, he suddenly slipped his arms around her and kissed her. When he released her, he saw that her eyes were shining.

"Oh . . . John!" she breathed.

He didn't say anything. Taking her arm, he guided her back to the clubhouse. He felt bleak inside. Kissing Harriet hadn't helped. He was still thinking of Virginia. . . .

Inside, Harriet said she wanted to go to the powder room to repair her make-up. John told her he would wait for her in the cocktail lounge.

He found Virginia and her uncle still sitting at the bar. They motioned to him, so he joined them again.

A twinkle of amusement came into Virginia's eyes. She reached out, took John's handkerchief from his breast pocket, then wiped his mouth.

"You should be more careful," she said. "After a walk in the moonlight, always remove the lipstick. See?" She showed him a red smear on the hankerchief.

His cheeks flamed. He felt like a fool.

As Virginia tucked the handkerchief back into his pocket, she gave him a bright smile. Then, she turned to speak to some one on the other side of her.

John frowned at the back of her blonde head, wishing that he had never known her — wishing that there were only Harriet. Once again, she had the laugh on him. Would she never stop mocking him?

In Memoriam

ADA LLEWELLYN

The death occurred at Gaspereaux on December 11th of Ada Llewellyn in the sixty-eighth year of her age. Deceased was the daughter of the late Henry Llewellyn, well-known blacksmith of this community, who plied his trade at Gaspereaux in the the closing years of the last century. She was the last surviving member of the family.

The late Miss Llewellyn was a general favorite in the community, and throughout her long illness which extended over a number of years, she showed that spirit of patient resignation to God's Will which is the unmistakable mark of the true Christian, and the evidence of a well-spent and truly useful life.

She leaves to mourn the loss of a kind and loving aunt the following nephews and neices: Harry Graham, Gaspereaux; Ellsworth Llewellyn, Montague and Mrs. Cameron Reid, Murray Harbor North; also a brother-in-law, William Graham, Gaspereaux and a number of grand nephews and grand neices.

Her funeral, which was largely attended, took place on December 12th. The service at the house was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Boyce of Georgetown, who paid touching tribute to her many good and kind qualities.

The following Hymns, all favorites of the deceased, were sung: The Lord is My Shepherd, Safe in The Arms of Jesus, also a solo "There'll Be No Night in Heaven" was beautifully rendered by Willard McLean. The funeral cortage then proceeded to Murray Harbor North where interment was made in the Cemetery there.

The pall bearers were: Angus Steele, Milton Reynolds, George Bloken, Austin Dwyer, Arthur O'Connor and Alex McKenzie.

In Memoriam

SGT. J. FRED MacLEOD

Many friends will be grieved to hear of the death of Sgt. J. Fred MacLeod. He was born on P. E. Island March 20th, 1884, the son of A. C. MacLeod, well known among the earliest lobster packers.

After spending his boyhood and youth in P. E. Island he was employed with the Bank of Nova Scotia where he remained seven years. The lure of the West was strong at that time for young people and on going to Gravellbourg, Sask., he took up homesteading, being among the pioneers of Southern Saskatchewan.

When the Great World War commenced he enlisted early in 1915 in the 46th Battalion, went overseas in September, was transferred to the 28th Battalion, was in the trenches on Christmas Day. He took part in the terrible crater fighting at St. Eloi when the brigade lost in killed and wounded 1100 in 4 days. The nature of the ground—wet and boggy made it almost impossible to have protection. A high explosive burst over the trench he was in and got 4 men—none were killed but two were very badly wounded. "My sensation" he wrote "was as though hit on the back of shoulder with a brick." He walked to the end of the trench and got a stretcher bearer for the others—then he walked three miles to 1st dressing station. He was later sent to Brighton, England where the doctors removed many pieces of shrapnel but had to leave one piece as it was very near the spine. He suffered from this quite often and was never again free from pain and ill-health. After returning to Canada he settled in Regina, Sask., where he was employed with the Northern Electric Co., for a few years. Later he was Assistant Manager and Confidential Secretary with the Midland Electric Co. Owing to the depression this Company like many firms had to close down. He carried on although suffering from heart attacks for years.

In April 1942 his doctor pronounced him unfit for further work and advised complete rest and lower altitude, so his wish was to come back to his boyhood home. After coming back his health seemed to improve and he had a delightful Summer enjoying the lovely shores of the "Cove" the old MacLeod home on the north side of P. E. Island where he loved to be and memories of youthful days were so pleasant. He also loved beautiful French River which flows almost by the door of his uncle's home. About 1st September he got much worse and under medical care did not improve much, so early in December he entered the P. E. Island Hospital, Charlottetown, where he had all attention and was comfortable but death was not far away. On the 18th January he pssed away peacefully, fully conscious to the last. His funeral was held on the 20th from the home of his uncle Capt. Alfred MacLeod and quite a large number of friends and neighbors attended, despite the extreme cold. The Rev. H. M. Buntain conducted the service and spoke so many comforting words. He leaves to mourn his wife Annie Belle Purvis formerly of Glasgow, Scotland, and an aged mother over 87 years of age His uncle Capt. Alfred and wife, one aunt in Regina, Sask., Mrs. Sadie R. Whelan, besides many loved cousins and friends. Pall bearers were Messrs. Frank Bernard, Ira MacLeod, Fred MacLeod, Fred Bernard, J. K. Pidgeon, Harry Underhill. Undertaker, Joseph G. Davison, Kensington, in charge. He was tenderly laid to rest in the Geddie Memorial Cemetery beside his father who pre-deceased him eleven years ago. His younger brother Harold died overseas during the last war, aged 20 years.

"I have fought the good fight
I have finished my course
I have kept the faith."

Card of Thanks

His Wife, Mother, Capt. Alfred and Mrs. MacLeod take this opportunity of thanking the doctors and nursing staff of the Prince Edward Island Hospital, the many Charlottetown friends, the good neighbors and friends in French River and Park Corner for their many acts of kindness and sympathy in their bereavement.

..*W. M. S. MEETING —The W. M. S. of Montague United Church, held their meeting at the home of Mrs. J R. Fraser on Tuesday evening, although the weather was not at its best their was a good attendance and after the business meeting which was disposed of at the beginning the members had a pleasant surprise when the C. G. I. T. girls arrived and assisted the leader Mrs. L. A. Johnston in her Devotional service. The Theme was "Reaching Every Person with Christian Teaching." Mrs. Johnson read some very interesting articles showing how Christian teaching and example was so far reaching and what every Christian could do right in their homes and among their friends if they were sincere. She called on different members for reading and prayer and the C. G. I. T. leader Miss Pearl Green also gave a message. Then four of the girls, Jean Duvar, Millie Clements, Irene Bruce and Violet Haywood, sang a double duet, Somebody Did A Golden Deed. After the prayer circle, they again favored their listeners with The Garden of Prayer. It was a very lovely service and it made one rejoice to think that when the older members are no longer able to carry on, such a fine group will be ready to take up the work The meeting closed with the Mizpah Benediction. Refreshments were served and a small fee charged which would help in the work. L.

BONSHAW W. M. S.

The first meeting of the new year of the W M. S. of Bonshaw United Church was held on Monday evening, January 11th, at the home of Mrs Steward McNevin. In the absence of the president the past president conducted the meeting using the theme for the worship period. Reaching every person with Christian Tteaching." The hymn Standing at the Portal of the opening year was sung followed by responsive reading Psalm 27. The officers were installed by the past president, Mrs. Geddie MacLeod who used the installation service of the mission circle program. This period closed by singing a "Charge to Keep I Have" and a short prayer. After the roll call which was answered by a verse of scripture the minutes were read and approved. Six members paid dues and two new members were welcomed. It was decided to organize a mission Band with Mrs. Steward McNevin and Mrs. Shaw as leaders. A discussion took place regarding the sending of clothing to Newfoundland but nothing definite decided. Mrs Shaw gave the reports of committees for the past year. A letter of thanks from Mr. Hessell McNevin for fruit received was read and Mrs. Neil Ferguson also expressed her deep appreciation for fruit sent Mr. Ferguson during his illness. Mrs. Shaw was asked to take fruit to another members who was ill.

The program from the study book was given by Mrs. Neil Ferguson, who stressed the importance of Christian Education in the Home, Church, Sunday School and public schools. Mrs. Geddy MacLeod is to give the lesson "Wholesome Recreation" for next night of meeting which is to be held at the home of Mrs. (Dr). O. H. Curtis on Feb. 8th. Refreshments were served by hostess assisted by Mrs. Fergusen after singing hymn 383. Meeting closed with many happy anticipations for the success of the coming year.
