THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION

By Marion Rubincam

MORE COMPLICATIONS

Chapter 55

The sudden silence that followed James' threat was even more explosive than the conversation before it. It fairly fell upon us. We were stunned by it.

I looked about me, frightened, yet somehow fascinated. Jim shrank back, as though the boy has struck him bodily, and the red blood of anger ran from his face. Instead, a sickly pallor came over it—but his eyes were more dangerous than before.

James having been goaded into this outburst, suddenly grew calm. But he would not or could not meet his father's eyes—those little deep-set eyes that were gleaming now with a wicked anger in them. James, I think now, realized how far he had gone. He had said something that would change the course of all our lives perhaps—that would, perhaps, break up our family. And he was afraid.

I had plenty of time to watch everything, for we were all stunned and our silence lasted a long time. Violet had gone dead white. Her eyes looked unearthly in their blueness against her pale skin. As for Esther—and we all turned to look at her—I never saw so many emotions reflected simultaneously on anyone's face.

Esther had worked hard that day, and her face showed it in every sagging line. I felt suddenly so very sorry for her—sorry for her narrow life, her lack of any interests outside her family, sorry for the old age that was coming so swiftly over her, and for her frank homeliness.

And now, by one sentence all her placid illusions were shattered, the very heart of her life was taken away from her.

"Oh God, my God!" she said. And sat down suddenly on one of the chairs.

We turned, as she did to Jim. But the red was coming back to his face again, and he found his voice.

It ain't so, he said, loudly again, and looked threateningly at his son.

Esther looked at James pathetically pleading.

James! James she cried. What are you saying? A woman where? What do you mean?

I've said enough James answered sullenly.

You've said more'n enough, Jim bellowed, and swore at him again.

But he says it ain't so, James, he says——"

I've said enough James answered again. I won't say anything more—and I won't take back what I said.

And he turned and went out of the room.

I'll kill you for this, Jim swore.

I looked at Violet. Then, by some mutual flash of intuition, we turned and went out of the room—leaving Esther dull-eyed, still not comprehending, facing her lover husband.

I'm going to find James come on, Violet said.

We went out of the front door and around the house—James had slammed through the kitchen door. He was nowhere in sight, and he did not answer when we called, as we did when we were sure our voices would not reach to the house again.

Finally we went through the barn. There was no one around. Then Vi climbed to the haymow, and called his name where he could hear her if he were in the little hidden workshop—the cause of this sudden upheaval in our quiet family.

Do you suppose he's done anything—anything awful? she turned to me, her face still pale, her eyes running over with nervous tears.

It's all right, I told her, though I was far from thinking so. I simply did not want to see her cry I could not bear to feel she was unhappy. She had enough troubles without worrying over James.

To tell the truth I was a little stunned myself. After all Jim was my brother; we had played together, grown up together, we had always, except for the first few years of his marriage lived in the same house.

I knew he had a bad temper, and it was aggravated by misfortune and luck had not been with him for a long time. It was his own fault perhaps. He was narrow he would not adopt progressive ideas, he would not even adopt common sense ones at times. But he worked desperately hard. And down in him, buried deep, was a streak of something very soft and tender.

Esther had killed this—Esther sitting limply, stupidly in the kitchen, with the wreck of her illusions about her. But analyzing one causes did not make the result more bearable. I was stunned too. Life was simple enough for me—a man was good when he was faithful to his wife when he wasn't he was wicked. There was no extenuating circumstances.

And he was my brother! The words—"that woman in Eastlake" rang in my ears.

Violet meanwhile had slipped down the passage between the hay and the barn wall. Evidently the door into James' hidden workroom was open, for her voice reached me from a long distance.

Aunt Enid, she called, and her voice sounded frightened. Come here!.

"The Broken Wing"

A Jump-spark Romance of Modern Mexico

BY PAUL DICKEY AND CHARLES W. GODDARD

From the Sensationally Successful Play Novelized by Charles W. Goddard

Of course Inez was ignorant of psychology, understood nothing of hypnotism and had never heard of Freud and his rather terrifying discoveries that our unconscious (or sub conscious) selves have almost complete control over our loves and, in fact, most all important matters. Yet had the great Dr. Freud been present to direct the girl in conducting a startling experiment, it could not have been more skillfully and scientifically performed than it was by this artless little maid.

Once shortly before daybreak, she noticed that the youth's eyelids slightly parted, revealing a trace of light blue. She stopped talking. The silence seemed to disturb the sleeper. He tossed restlessly, opened his eyes wider and murmured:

"Angel — Brown eyed angel. Don't go away, brown eyed angel."

The girl bent over and answered him straight from her heart. He looked at her a moment, smiled in a way that she remembered to her last day and then drifted back to that unexplored "hinterland" of the mind, called "sleep" Yet all through the night as Inez's voice rambled on, the traces of that smile seemed to remain.

Really this little child of nature was talking for her own entertainment. She was making very positive and intimate statements and repeating them over and over again. Had Farley or the captain heard these statements they would have been challenged with considerable heat. How could Inez know that in certain forms of insensibility, the sub-conscious self hears and understands every word. Farley who read much could have told her this and that what the sub-conscious learn it never forgets. The old man looked in frequently during the night, but Inez always heard his footsteps and was silent. For the same reason the captain saw nothing but a sleeping patient and a watchful nurse. He too prayed that the visitor from the skies might recover, but his motives were strictly business.

Only silent, barefooted Outchita saw, heard and understood.

"Maybe, he hear you," she suggested.

"No" said Inez. "He is asleep very deep asleep."

Then Ouichita, from the very depths of her ignorance and superstition stated a scientific fact:

"He is asleep, yes, but I think maybe, his soul listen to you, See all the time he sort of smile."

For once Inez declined to believe her guide councellor and friend.

Having done its worst, the storm like a criminal, promptly fled the country. Dawn broke with customery tropic suddenness, and with it came more clattering of hoofs. The captain looked up from his labors thinking more help was arriving. But this caller never helped anyone but himself. Innocencio cast a hostile eye at the gaudy red and gold general's epaulets on the stranger's shoulders and set himself for trouble.

Ever since the death of Carranza, he had expected to hear from the new adminstration.. The workers saluted him of the gaudy epaulets and ceased to work, that they might better concentrate their childish minds on staring and wondering. The bandit perched on Farley's roof appeared not to notice. The great man's eye, distracted for the moment by the sight of the aeroplane did not, at first note the oversight. Then in a rasping voice he commanded:

"Stand up and salute your superior."

The captain turned slowly, looked the general over indifferently yawned and saluted in as slovenly manner as only a Mexican can achieve. Then he grinned. The general's sunken eyes snapped.

"Come down here at once. I have a paper for you from the presidente."

EVACUATION OF BRITISH BEGINS AT CONSTANTINOPLE

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 7. — One hundred families of British officers and civilians left Constantinople today in accordance with the plan for the evacuation of the city by the British in the event of an amicable arrangement being reached with the Kemalists for the occupation of the Capital.

Additional departures will take place as transportation is valuable.

The continued exodus of Europeans, Greeks and Armnians has served to cut house rentals in two and also reduce real estate value.

MORE COAL FOR CANADA.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.— Heavy shipments of coal, amounting to more than a million tons a week, are being dumped at Lake Erie ports, according to figures of the American Railway Association. Most of this moving via the Great Lakes to North-western states. While little of it is going to Canada, the belief of coal and railroad men is that with the Northwestern States practically relieved from fear of fuel famine, shipments into Canada from this time on will steadily increase.

RADIO SHOW AT CHICAGO WILL BE "BIGGEST EVER"

TORONTO, Oct. 7.—The largest radio exposition ever held in the United States will take place in the Coliseum at Chicago from Oct. 14 to 28, inclusive, and will be known as the Annual Chicago Radio Show.

The Chicago Radio Show will be exclusively a manufacturer's show, the first affair of that kind ever held. In connection with this phase of the project the convention committee of the newly formed National Radio Chamber of Commerce has had a special meeting in New York to discuss plans for holding the first national convention in connection with the Chicago Show. Most of the large manufacturers will be represented at the show and it would be the logical time for the holding of the convention. The big auditorium in the Coliseum Annex has been tendered to the Radio Chamber of Commerce for a meeting place.

Annual Meeting of the Queen's County Liberal Conservative Association

The Annual Meeting of the Queen's County Liberal Conservative Association will be held in the Market Hall, Charlottetown, on Tuesday, the 17th day of October next, at the hour of 12.30 o'clock in the afternoon.

The chairman of each poll in the County will call a meeting of the Conservative electors in his poll and have five delegates appointed to attend the said meeting.

Lady voters are especially requested to attend.

Drink Water When Your Kidneys Hurt

Stop Eating Meat for a While if Your Bladder is Troubling You

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. An excess of meat may form uric acid, which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in urine so it no longer irritates, thus often ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia water drink. Drinl lots of soft water.
