SURPRISE TO DOCTORS.

Most doctors are astonished at the results obtained by Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for eczema, salt rheum and itching skin diseases which are often considered well nigh incurable. By word of mouth from friend to friend the exceptional merits of Dr. Chase's Ointment have gradually become known until it is now standard the world over and has a record of cures unparallelled in the history of medicine.

THOUGHT TRANSFERENCE.

The word telepathy was formed to express the direct communication of one mind with another, otherwise than in the ordinary and recognized ways, as for instance the supposed action of one mind on another at a distance where words, signs, looks, gestures, telegraphic or telephonic and all known means of communication were absent. There are many recorded instances apparently well authenticated where telepathic communication has been had. The medium has not been discovered, nor has the law been made known by which telepathy, or thought transference, or mind reading are effected or why these processes are limited to certain occasions or conditions. The discussion of these abssruce questions has been revived in London by a remarkable letter sent by Rider Haggard to the press. Mr. Haggard is well known to the reading world as a writer of incredible romances, but otherwise bears the reputation of a man of truth and veracity.

The story told by Mr. Haggard is in brief that on July 10, he suffered a painful night-mare in the course of which, while still half conscious, he dreamed or saw that his favorite retriever was dying, that he himself was close to it and the dog was endeavoring to tell him the facts. The dog had in fact been killed by a train about three hours before Mr. Haggard's dream, or nightmare, or mental impression of the accident. To explain this incident in accordance with the common ly accepted theory of telepathy, the influence of mind upon mind, we must assume that the conscious intelligence of the dog had survived the death of his body and was able to impress the mind of Mr. Haggard in the manner stated. This is an extension of the ordinarly understood principle of telepathy by which its operations were limited to the transference of thought from one human mind to another at a distance.

There are other closely related phenomena in which however the conditions are still further varied. In one case within the knowledge of the writer, an individual in church was deeply impressed with a mental impression which seemed to say, "Hurry to your office." This was repeated and re-repeated it until produced such an intense impression that the person affected left the meeting, ran with all speed to his place of business and there found his closed and locked office filled with dense smoke and in danger of destruction with its contents by fire. There were a number of other persons working in adjoining offices at the time, but all were entirely unconcious of anything being wrong. Here there could be no thought transference, for neither human being, dog nor animal knew of the fire in question. An yet we doubt not that all such incidents are in accord with and governed by some natural law yet undiscovered. We no longer believe in witches or fairies, but we do believe with Shakespeare that, "There are more things in Heaven and earth. Horatio, than are dreamed of in your philosophy."

The assassination of the Russian Minister of the Interior, Von Plehve, following closely upon the murder of the Governor of Finland, indicates a renewal of Nihilist activity against which no life of any prominent official is safe. One report makes a woman the assassin, no doubt from choice. Despotism in these days carries with it a terrible peril and often pays a terrible price for the privilege of oppressing the masses. The Czar, himself apparently a well-disposed man, lives in constant dread of assassination, and although the greatest precautions are taken to guard his person it will not be surprising if he yet shares the fate of his grandfather, who was killed by a Nihilist bomb in 1881.
