—MATHIESON PICNIC — Sergeant D. A. Mathieson of Regina, Sask. Police Dept., who was visiting his old home and parents (Angus and Mrs. Mathieson at Springfield) left recently to resume his duties. He was accompanied by his wife (nee Miss McKenzie), and four children. The oldest, James, (15 years) is pipe major in the Regina Kilties Band. Sergeant "Dan", a champion wrestler and a good all-round athlete, was chiefly instrumental in developing McCready, the great Canadian champion. He was always a patron and apostle of athletic sport. He arranged a set of events for all the children from 5 to 15 years, and provided prizes of chocolate bars, nickels and dimes. It was a glorious day for the children, one which they will never forget. Dan also gave a demonstration of many of the different "holds" in modern wrestling which made a great impression on the kids. It is rather a pity that there is not more of those kind of picnics fostered and patronized here. We have a fine lot of able-bodied young men and women growing up, but apparently most of them are not directed along the line of athletic endeavor, consequently our boys and girls do not seem to be able to go abroad as the old Abegweits in days gone by and bring home the spoils of victory and fame and glory for themselves and P. E. Island. It is "up to" the present generation to bestir themselves, unless they are content to become decadent, cake-eating molly coddles. The inter-scholastic sports at the Abegweit grounds flourished for two years and was the means of developing some good athletes, proving that the present generation was not decadent—and the want of proper direction. It seems to this writer that a great move toward the beautification of Charlottetown could be done by the civic authorities collaborating with the Dominion in the rehabilitation of the Abegweit grounds and track. Tourists as well as all others need alternate periods of rest and activity. They will want to see some "action." K

—FROM BUFFALO N. Y. —Mr. and Mrs. James Moulder and daughter, Mary Lou of Buffalo are at present visiting friends and relatives in this Province. Mrs. Moulder was formerly Levisa MacMillan, of Clermont, sister of Dr. W. J. P. McMillan. The party were guests of Rev R. F. Macdonald, of Indian River, on Sunday, also visited old time friends. After an absence of twenyt-six years Mrs. Moulder is more enamoured with the beauties of "the Island" and its people than ever. She was a most popular young lady among the social set in Kensington and vicinity and apparently here faculty and aptitude of making friends has not changed. —K.

—DEATH OF JOHN DOYLE—One of the pioneers of West Prince passed away last Friday in the person of John Doyle, at the great age of 94 years. Mr. Doyle's father, James Doyle, was one of the original settlers in Campbellton, Lot 4 and also one of the first members of St. Marks Roman Catholic Church, Lot 7. John, resided on a farm near the original homestead of his father, and was the last surviving member of a large family. In early life he lived for a time in the United States, but returned to his native land where he married and brought up a family, now residing in the United States, with the exception of one son, Harold, who lives on the homestead. Mr. Doyle is survived by his widow, formerly Miss Phee of Tignish, to whom much sympathy is extended in the loss of her life's partner. The funeral was held on Monday morning from St. Mark's Church, Lot 7, and was largely attended by a large number of friends.—S.

FORMER DEPUTY

also 18, for whom Ingalls said the boy had an "encompassing love" heard the gruesome recital.

Over a long period, Ingalls charged, the 43-year-old Carroll had illicit relations with Barbara, who also had "transgressed the rules" in her friendship with Dwyer.

Paul, said the prosecutor, informed Dr. Littlefield of the contents of the letters in which Barbara had confessed being intimate with her father.

Unnamed persons trying to get those letters, Ingalls said, on one occasion tried to shoot the youth.

At the Oct. 13 meeting in Dwyer's Paris Hill home, he said Dwyer would testify Carroll kicked the old doctor, slugged him on the head with his pistol butt, and then strangled him to death with a belt.

Dwyer's confession, admitted at this trial, said he garroted the physician in anger at a deprecatory remark about Dwyer's "girl."

Later, the boy confessed, he slew Mrs. Littlefield, because she suspected what had happened to the doctor, and took both bodies on a bizarre "death tour" by motor that ended in arrest at North Arlington, N. J.

While the youth was being tried, Ingalls alleged, Carroll warned Dwyer that "if you don't stick to your original story I'll shoot your heart out and say you were trying to escape."

Carroll then was a deputy sheriff. Five months later, after his arrest on a morals charge involving Barbara, he was ousted.

From his prison cell, Ingalls related, Dwyer wrote Carroll that "you promised to get me out of this scrape if I kept quiet, but you haven't done so and I'm going to tell all I know."

Russia And Japan Well Supplied With Motives For Conflict of Chinese Manchurian Provinces—the establishment of Manchoukuo—brought the armies of Tokyo and Moscow face-to-face in 1933.

Involved in the underlying enmity of Japan and Russia are:—

The geographical proximity of two heavily armed nations, one hungry for empire and the other intent on keeping what it has;

Diverse Japanese and Russian political doctrines;

A Japanese belief that Russian purges have weakened the Soviet Union;

A Russian belief that more than a year of expensive war on China has taxed the martial resources of Japan, making her an easy foe;

A Japanese belief that Germany might help her fight Russia—all supposedly assured by the German-Italian-Japanese anti-Comintern pact;

Japan has built her army in Manchoukuo up to about 500,000 men, by conservative estimate. Industries are working on a wartime basis in the Japanese protectorate. The Japanese have constructed a network of strategic railways up to the Soviet frontier.

On the Russian side the picture is much the same—although secrecy surrounds the preparations on both sides. Moscow's Far Eastern forces are believed to onumber between 300,000 and 500,000 men, linked to Western Russia by a constantly improving communication system.

According to Japanese estimates, Russia has from 800 to 1,500 planes to support the Far Eastern forces. Vladivostok, at the tip of the dagger-shaped bit of Siberia on the east of Manchoukuo, is about 750 air miles from Tokyo.

In case of war, the Red army could count on another 100,000 men from Outer Mongolia whom Russia has equipped and whom Soviet officers have trained. Outer Mongolia, the Mongolian people's republic, is under Soviet protection but recognized as a part of China.

Some 3,400 miles of border likely would become a battleline between Russia and Japan — the boundaries between Manchaukuo and Siberia and between Outer Mongolia and Inner Mongolia, the latter now partly under Japanese domination.

Canada At War

TWENTY-YEARS AGO TODAY

(Written for The Candaian Press)
(By CAPT. W. W. MURRAY, M. C.)

A military dictum pronounced by Duke of Wellington as of supreme value in estimating strategic situations set forth that a commander's duty was to try to guess accurately what the enemy was doing "on the other side of the hill." Early in August, 1918, the Germans had no difficulty in guessing what was happening to the Candian Corps. From many sources intelligence was received that the Candians were on the move to Flanders, to Kemmel Hill. And since their presence at any part of the front usually presaged active operations, the enemy guessed, by putting two and two together, that the next blow of the Allied armies would be there.

They were correct in their information that the Corps was moving. And they were partly correct as to direction. Junior officers of the Canadian Corps themselves knew no better, although the unit commanders had, in the first days of August, been made aware of what was immediately in store. But they kept a tight lip.

Exciting Days

The disappearance of the Candians from the Arras front, and their sudden bobbing up in a sector far distant from their advertised destination constitutes one of the most romatic episodes of the Great War. Romance and drama characterized the whole manoeuvre. A completely intimate picture of the situation unfolds itself if one follows the movements of one of the infantry units in those exciting hours. The record of the 2nd Canadian Battalion illustrates generally what took place throughout.

"Relieved in the front line trenches south of the Scarpe, near Arras, at the beginning of August," the historian of this unit writes, "the Battalion marched to Dainville and there embussed to the village of Lingnereuil. This place was a few miles north-east of St. Pol, and was familiar to us for we had spent many weeks in billets at Lignereuil during the long rest period of the preceeding months.

"Then men had no illusions about returning there for another rest. Everyone was talking about Kemmel Hill, and general belief was that Lignereuil was merely a staging place for the move north. The troops were paid; and in their paybooks was pasted the caution, more forcible than refined: 'Keep your mouth shut!' The men heeded the injunction, but were glad to find their own wise prognostications confirmed by the estaminet proprietors who assured them that the Canadians were going to attack at Kemmel.

"A muster-parade was held during a violent thunderstorm at two o'clock in the afternoon of Aug. 4, and one company was detached from the unit to proceed to Petit Houvin, a small wayside station near St. Pol, to load the transport. Equipment was inspected, shortages replaced, and early in the evening the remaining three companies set out for Petit Houvin.

"It was pitch-dark when we entrained. No one knew our destination but just a few minutes before the train started, the Brigade Major handed the Adjutant an envelope with the curt order to 'open it at Abbeville.' So, every rumor was nailed hard and fast. Abbeville was up north.

"Cramped in the box-cars which bore the mystic sympol '40 men or 8 horses,' the troops passed uncomfortable and sleepless hours. They were not disturbed by their conditions, however; all were pleasantly interested in the mystery of what would come next. The train puffed and groaned slowly through the night, and at daybreak Abbeville was reached. Eagerly the Adjutant opened the envelope. But alas, for his expectations. All that was written on the small slip of paper contained therein was: 'Detrain at Nesle Normandaise.' No one knew where Nesle Normandaise was. No one cared very much. All were tired and sleepy. And so, the train continued on, making a wide southerly arc via Calais to Nesle Normandaise

Hear Grim Stories

"At Gamaches the Battalion was hailed by troops of the 52nd Division, who had departed from the Vimy Ridge some weeks previously. They had been down in the Rheims fighting and were returning. They told grim stories of bloody battles.

"Around noon the train finally puffed into Nesle Normandaise, a small village on the Bresle river, on the borders of Normandy. A seven-mile march through beautiful country brought us to the village of Aumatre, a place which had not at auy time been in the zone of actual hostilities. It was peaceful; and its inhabitants were kindly hospitable peasants.

"A mile or so west of Aumatre railway troops were building a line which, they said, would skirt Amiens, in the direction of Paris. This meant nothing to the Canadian infantrymen, nor did Amiens register with them. No mention had ever been made of Amiens in connection with any forthcoming operations.

"Apparently Kemmel Hill had been all 'camouflage' for they were now farther away from Kemmel than they had ever been. The mystery was dark and deep; but the men did not permit their bewilderment to upset them. Aumatre was a picturesque, quiet village; its billets were good and its estaminet proprietors had not yet learned the gouging tactics of their compatriots nearer the line. Life for the moment was rosy, whatever the future might bring. And, never burdening themselves uselessly with thoughts of the morrow, the troops set themselves to deriving pleasure from Aumatre."

Plan Reception For Wrong-way Flier

(A.P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 2—Amused over the apparent discord between Manhattan and Brooklyn over the proper reception for Douglas Corrigan, Newark Advertising Club officials today announced plans for welcoming the wrong-way flier to New Jersey's metropolis next Monday.

Corrigan, who started, he said, from Floyd Bennett Field for California and wound up instead in Ireland, will arrive in New York on the liner Manhattan Thursday.

He will be brought from New York by automobile with police escort, club officials said, and taken to Newark Airport for an inspection trip. From there he will be driven to city hall for an official greeting from the city fathers and then will be taken down Broad Street in a ticker tape parade.

A luncheon and reception, with state and city officials attending, will be held at noon at Newark Athletic Club.

The man who acts his thought andthinks little of his act is the man who scores.

Upset Marks Tennis Play At Toronto

(By Jack Calder, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

TORONTO, Aug. 2—Big Bill Pigott, who was supposed to be just a good indoor player, rallied when elimination from Canadian tennis championships seemed imminent today to upset Lewis Duff, the Ontario champion, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2, in the third round.

Trailing 1-3 in the second set, the broad shouldered Hamilton boy assembled an all-around game at that point to force errors from Duffy, a red-headed Montrealer who attends the University of Miami. He chased his peppery opponent around the deep court and, when he got his net game going, made Duff chop the ball into the mesh or hammer it past the baseline.

Pigott advanced with 15 others and earned the right to play Ross Wilson of Toronto, who with two other members of Canada's 1938 Davis Cup team had to struggle long and hard to survive today's round. An ailing service cut Wilson's margin over Bill Pinkerton of Toronto to 6-3, 7-5.

Laird Watt of Montreal, doubles player on the team which lost to Japan last week, survived an erratic first set to down the veteran Bill Noyes of Toronto, 1-6, 6-3, 6-2. Doug Cameron of Vancouver, ranked third in Canada beside Watt last year, pulled through with 6-3, 6-8, 7-5 decision over J. Grant McLean of Toronto, Northern Ontario champion.

Frankie Parker, no. 3 in the United States, and Bobby Murray no. 1 in Canada, advanced easily along with Wilmer Allison of Dallas, Texas, those three and Wilson are the tourney's top seeded players.

Parker defeated Nick Saba of Toronto, 6-0, 6-1. Murray stopped Army Armstrong of Oshawa, Ont., 6-2, 6-2, and Allison had only slightly more difficulty downing Jack Vanstone of Toronto, 6-2, 6-3.

Dr. Georges Leclerc of Montreal produced some of the tournament's most sparkling play to submerge Vladimir Havlicek of Toronto, Czechoslovakian star, whose defeat of Gilbert Nunns of Toronto was a second round sensation. Scores were 6-0, 6-1.

Vancouver's two good youngsters, Bill Pedlar and Phil Pearson, passed from the picture before more experienced players.
