DUKE AND DUCHESS OF KENT'S CHILDREN HAVE FIRST ADVENTURE INTO REALM OF IMAGINATION

The Duchess of Kent believes in the educational value of nursery rhymes and fables She has had them woven into two nursery rugs for her children. Prince Edward's rug depicts in gaily colored Scottish wools seven favorite English rhymes.

Princess Alexandra's rug is inscribed in her mother's childhood tongue French and illustrates 34 of Lafontaine's fables.

One day these handmade rugs, each 7 ft. 6 in. by 4 ft. in, will become heirlooms in the Royal family.

Experts believe that they are capable of three centuries of hard wear. The Scottish wool is woven on to twisted Scottish linen basis of greater strength than that employed in many old English carpets still in use.

The animals on the rugs have provided the Royal babies with their first adventures in the world of imagination. Nurse Smith is called on to relate how the cow jumped over the moon; this makes the centre panel in Prince Edward's rug.

He is never tired of hearing about Miss Muffet and the Spider, Mary Mary Quite Contrary, and Marjorie Daw on the seesaw; these are the nursery rhymes woven on the left, and on the right three more are illustrated Jack Horner, Humpty Dumpty, and Baa Baa Black Sheep.

The little Prince is to learn to count from his rug; the figures are printed down the left side, and he will say the alphabet from the letters printed across the top and bottom.

All her five names, Alexandra Helen Elizabeth Olga Christabel, and the date of her birth in French are woven into Princess Alexandra's more cosmopolitan rug, from which she will make acquaintance with Lafontaine's animal characters, among them the crow with the cheese and the fox who asked his to sing, the grasshopper and the ant, the deer who saw his reflection, the hare and the tortoise

The youth who marvelled that the mighty oak could produce such small fruit as an acorn is shown beside the tree. Below are the words, "Tout parle en mon ouvrage et meme les poissons."

Each rug contains five to six million stitches, took six girls a year to do, and is inscribed with the name of the London needlework carpet artist, Pontremoli, whose productions are likely to find their way ultimately into museums.

ADVISES CHANGE IN PERSONALITY

NEW YORK, May 5—(CP)—The pronounced individuality of the Dionne quintuplets, in spite of identical experiences and influences, should be a warning to mothers against attempting to make their children alike in personality, Mrs. Sidonie Matsner Gruenberg, head of the Child Study Association, wrote on a recent report.

"Regard for the personality," Mrs. Gruenberg said, "means not merely that we must consider the individual as distinguished from other individuals, we must regard the individual as he becomes different day by day.

"It often became necessary to separate the quintuplets and deal with them individually. At about 2 1-2 years, after they had learned to remain asleep until it was time to get up, they began to get up in the bed and start calling each other across the room. They had earned the art of speech and their new interest found expression in a way that cut right across their good habits."

Children she said, should be studied in connection with their personality as well as their growth.

DREAMS OF OLD TIMES

(The old timers will remember the song: "Waterloo", the following verses may be sung to that tune.)

The shadows of the evening
Softly steal across the sky,
And in my dreams, to me it seems,
I drift to P. E. I.
And time turns backwards in its flight
Although my hopes are vain,
In my fond court of fancy,
I am just a boy again.

Once more I view the scenes I knew
Of days that have gone by,
See rippling brooks, and shady nooks,
Fond memories of P. E. I.
I walk along those country roads
Thru' fields all fresh and green,
And say "Hello" to all my friends,
(There's teardrops in my dream).

Again I stroll thru' shady groves
Down by a shining stream,
I see a mill, hear whip-poor-will,
All nature is supreme,
And then again I'm standing near
A little schoolhouse door,
While 'cross the street, each night we'd meet,
Within a grocery store.

A small house standing near the road
Brings from my heart a sigh,
Those scenes of yore, I see once more,
Back home on P. E. I.
I walk within a garden small
Where flowers fair do bloom,
Wild roses and for-get-me-nots,
All shed their sweet perfume.

But now my dream is fading
No longer I'm a boy,
I try in vain, to grasp again,
Those fleeting bits of joy,
The shadows they have deepened
And the moon is now on high,
I pray its light, shines soft and bright,
On dear old P. E. I.

Coast Recounts Its 1907 Riots About Asiatics

ORIENTALS WERE FLOODING PROVINCE THOSE DAYS AND VANCOUVER TOOK MATTERS IN OWN HANDS.

BY CHARLES NICHOLS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

VANCOUVER, May 5—(CP) — Verbal weapons today have replaced the concrete missiles with which white Canadians of 31 years ago protested the immigration of Orientals into British Columbia.

While today opponents of Japanese immigration use resolutions and protests to administrative bodies, the citizens of three decades ago found expression for their feelings in riots which surged through the Oriental-settled section of Vancouver and left numerous wounded in their wake.

Literally hundreds of Chinese and Japanese were flooding into Canada's Pacific coast in September, 1907, when anti-Oriental feeling reached the breaking point. The Immigration Regulation Act which would have excluded Orientals other than those born in British Columbia had been passed but had not been implemented.

A steamer-load of several hundred Chinese was nearing Vancouver when the riots broke. An effigy of Lieutenant-Governor Dunsmuir, who refused to assent to the Regulation Act, was burned in front of the city hall as hundreds of whites cheered.

Those who had watched the effigy burn became a mob, rushed through Chinatown and through the streets of the Japanese colony, clashed there with Orientals armed with broken bottles, stones and firearms.

The federal government, alarmed over the severity of the outbreak, sent W. L. Mackenzie King, then deputy minister of labor, to Vancouver to investigate the situation. As a result of negotiations between the Canadian and Japanese governments the Japanese agreed to restrict immigration which had been proceeding at the rate of about 7,000 a year.

Vancouver residents picked up their newspapers of Monday, Sept. 9, 1907, to read that Chinese residents were buying revolvers to protect themselves and that special police were being sworn in to prevent recurrence of the riots of the preceding Saturday.

What Happened Then

This is how the Vancouver Province of that day told of the riots:

"When the match was touched to the suspended effigy of straw and old clothes (representing the lieutenant-governor) the crowd shouted itself hoarse with delight.

"By 9 o'clock Saturday evening the thousands of people who could not gain admission to the City Hall where a big anti-Asiatic mass meeting was being held began to search for diversion elsewhere. It was this crowd which split into small sections, some of which eventually consolidated into a property-smashing job.

"Thirty thousand people thronged the streets in the vicinity of the zone of disturbance. While orators of the anti-Asiatic meeting were counselling moderation, the mob of congenially violent spirits had gathered. Leaderless, it cast about for some vent for its feelings, which was found when some youngster tossed a brick through a window of a Chinese store Bricks and stones started to fly in every direction and the noise of shattering glass falling into stores answered the volleys of the mob. Chinese took to their heels, running into stores and barricading doors as rapidly as possible.

"By this time the police were alive to the fact that they had a dangerous situation to handle. By 10 o'clock practically every policeman on duty in Vancouver was on guard either in Chinatown or Japtown.

"But in Japtown the police were utterly unable to cope with the mob. The crash of glass was continual.

"On Powell Street, stronghold of the Japanese, the besieged showed fight. Armed with sticks, clubs, iron bars, revolvers, knives and broken bottles, the enraged aliens poured into the streets. Hundreds of the little brown men rushed the attacking force, their most effective weapons being the knives and bottles, the latter being broken off at the neck. Many a white man was badly gashed about the arms, face and neck.

"Armed only with stones, the mob could not stand before the onslaught. Many of the Japanese went to the ground as stones thumped against their heads; but the insensible ones were carried off by friends and the fight kept up till the mob wavered, broke, and finally retreated."

IN MEMORIAM

MR. BERNARD P. MURPHY

In the passing of Mr. Bernard P. Murphy, the relatives and many friends throughout the Province were sorely bereft of a dear father, a prudent counsellor and a valuable acquaintance.

While his death was not entirely unexpected, his passing caused great sorrow to all who were privileged to know him, and who eagerly awaited news of his complete recovery.

Rallying from a severe illness suffered during the past winter, Mr. Murphy later contracted pneumonia and after a short illness, peacefully passed away on Saturday, April 23, at the age of 76 years.

During his illness he was frequently visited by his pastor, Rev. Eugene Murray, as well as by his devoted children, who with the members of his immediate household did everything possible to combat the disease and restore their beloved one to his usual robust health. Failing in their worthy objective they accepted with resignation the decree of the Almighty Who called forth His "good and faithful servant."

The late Mr. Murphy, youngest son of the late Honourable Joseph Murphy, was a life long resident of Conway, where during the many years of his active life, he devoted himself unsparingly to the pursuits of farming and lobster packing wherein he distinguished himself for his industry, honesty with his fellow-men, and a prudent adviser to all who sought his advice.

Though advanced in years, and scourged with sickness, Mr. Murphy retained his usual genial disposition, which coupled with his subtle humour and cheery smile attracted both young and old to his side. His home was a welcome place, where hospitality and goodwill were always in evidence.

The deceased was a devoted member of the Catholic Church, and his life stands out as an example of a true Catholic father, a model to be followed. Consoled and strengthened by the last Sacraments of the Catholic Church, Mr. Murphy passed on calmly to meet the Saviour and receive his eternal reward.

In community affairs, the late Mr. Murphy displayed a keen interest and always championed any movement conducive to the general welfare of the country as a whole. His passing leaves an empty place which can never be filled.

There are left to mourn his wife, nee Caroline Greenan, two sons and three daughters, namely John, of the C.N.R. at Conway; Ignatius, of the staff of the Provincial Building, Charlottetown; Mrs. L. O. Kelly, Southport; Mrs. J.W. Trainor, Charlottetown Royalty; Lucilla at home. One daughter, Sister Mary Bernard, pre-deceased him some few years ago. One brother, Joseph, of Summerside, and one sister, Mrs. James Kilbride of Portland, Me., also survive him.

His funeral was held on April 25th to St. Bridget's Church, Lot 11, where Requiem Mass was sung by his Pastor, Rev. Eugene Murray, assisted in the sanctuary by Rev. W. V. MacDonald of Alberton, and Rev. Leonard MacDonald of Coleman. The large concourse of people who attended at the funeral Mass bears testimony of the popularity which Mr. Murphy enjoyed.

The pallbearers were Messrs. A. A. Ramsay, George Thompson, Arthur Smith, Nelson Palmer, Robert Skerry and Frank Bulger.

Numerous messages of condolence, Mass Cards, spiritual bouquets and sprays were received from the many sympathetic friends of the family who shared the sorrow caused by the death of a loved one and a highly respected citizen.

Are Your Children Protected?

Each year as the general public are becoming more healthminded they realize that many illnesses are unnecessary and can be prevented. Many diseases, that formerly took a heavy toll of lives, are today all but exterminated.

No disease, is more amenable to control than our former enemy—Smallpox, and Health Departments, the world over, have kept this disease in check by the very simple method of vaccination.

The Provincial Department of Health have succeeded in preventing smallpox in gaining a foothold in our Province for the past few years by keeping the school and preschool children protected by vaccination. This is a record for which we can be justly proud but it can only be maintained by the parents co-operating with the Health authorities in having their children receive this protection.

Next week the Department of Public Health is beginning a vaccinating campaign against smallpox in the schools of Queens County and the active co-operation of all parents and guardians of children is requested so that every child from six months to age and upwards, may receive this protection, who has not been already successfuly vaccinated.
