FINANCE

By Frederick Gardner
Associated Press Financial Writer

NEW YORK, Sept. 4—(AP)—Buyers flooded the stock market in the last 20 minutes of today's session, giving prices one of the biggest boosts in a full year and shoving the day's total sales to a level untouched in more than two months.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks jumped .9 of a point to 44.7. Transactions totalled 782,140 shares compared with 544,560 yesterday.

International Nickel, up 1 3-8 points to 28 3-4, topped a generally improved Canadian list. Gains of 3-4 of a point and less were scored by Walkers, Bell Telephone, Brazilian Traction, Ford and Imperial Oil. Shawinigan dipped a fraction.

Notable in this connection was a sudden runup in Australian and Canadian dollar bonds and a decline in German issues.

In the late drive, however, only 88 issues were left behind and 166 unchanged. The score card listed 490 stocks on the advance side.

Included in these last, with rises of one to three points or more were U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, Youngstown, General Motors, Chrysler, U. S. Rubber, Case, Caterpillar, Douglas United Aircraft, Sperry, Lockheed, Union Carbide, DuPont, Eastman, Westinghouse, American Smelting, American Telephone, Santa Fe, N.Y. Central, Great Northern preferred and Loft.

GRAIN

WINNIPEG, Sept. 4—(CP)—Buying interest was slight in the wheat futures market on the Winnipeg grain exchange today with reports of the sale of approximately 750,000 bushels of Canadian wheat for deferred shipment to the United Kingdom providing the only feature. Closing prices were at fixed minimum levels of 73 5-8 cents a bushel for the October future and 74 5-8 cents for December.

Buenos Aires was down 1-4 cent.

Most grades were in demand in the cash wheat market. No. 2 northern was selling at a better spread while no. 3 northern inclined to be a little easier. Fair amounts changed hands but buyers were not pressing.

LIVESTOCK

MONTREAL, Sept. 4—(CP)—There were 54 cattle, 38 sheep and lambs, 331 hogs and 45 calves for sale on the two Montreal livestock markets today, according in the market report of the Dominion Deparmtent of Agriculture, livestock branch.

Rivais of the Trail

"I know it, but's got to be done," Claude whispered back. "If my father's name is on those shares, I'm going to have them, either now or later on. They'll be either in this office or on Chavignaud's person. I have to know they're not here before we start out with the canoes. We'll have to take the risk. Come on!" He broke off suddenly, stiffening. "Here's a solitary sleigh now. Stop the horse, Andrew!"

Jingling musically along came a red-capped driver in his little low sleigh, and as he glided up to them, Valmorin stepped out suddenly from the darkness and checked the horse by the head.

"Eh! What now, camarades?" laughed the driver.

Having been persecuted merrily by the riotous revelers, he thought this was more of their pleasantry, but he was swiftly disillusioned. Before he had time to speak another word Claude had whipped him from his seat rolled his sash around his mouth as a gag, and tied his limts with the lashing ropes of the sleigh. Then they deposited the driver, corded like a sack, in a dark doorway and jumped into the sleigh.

"Quick, Andrew!" Claude urged.

Old Andrew cracked the lines over the shaggy horse's back and they slewed up with a cling-cling of bells at the entrance of the XY warehouse.

The light was dim at the entrance. Men were in a blind hurry. Before the sleigh had fairly stopped bales were crashing in, and as if to shoulder their share of the loading Gallinee and Valmorin dove into the obscure depths of the warehouse.

Stealing from shadow to shadow, from pile to pile of heaped-up freight, they made their way into a [illegible] from which the offices of the different XY partners led off. Many of the offices were still lighted and occupied though it was after midnight. These hummed with talk, but Chavignaud's, with his name painted on the door, was silent and in total darkness.

To and fro from the lighted offices men were coming and going constantly, partners on this or that business, the officers getting out their bills of freight, cancemen hiring at the last opportunity. The presence of Gallinee and Valmorin could cause no comment, for, their caps pulled low so as to hide their faces, it would have been difficult to recognize them and in the hurry they might well pass for XY men.

Loitering in the corridor and watching their chance when it was momentarily empty, they suddenly wheeled as they passed the door of Chavignaud's darkened office. Claude had his belt ax ready in the pocket of his trousers, and swiftly he inserted the blade between the door and jamb.

The office being but a partitioned section, the door was not constructed to withstand raids. Well within the centrol portion of the mercantile house within the protection of its heavy, outer barred doors, it had only the ordinary lock that guaranteed privacy. Claude's strength levering on the handle sprung it quivering open, and in another second he and old Andrew were inside.

"Shove the door to, Andrew," whispered Claude, "and hold your candle a minute. Here's his desk."

Chavignaud's desk was the usual high desk set across the end of the office. While Andrew struck light to his candle and shielded its glow under the canopy of his coat Claude got his ax blade under the desk lid and forced it as he had forced the door.

"Almost bare, Andrew," he muttered running the contents through his fingers. "Pretty well cleaned out before his start up the rivers! I thought he wouldn't chance leaving them here."

"Would he leave them anywhere else," breathed Andrew. "With another person, maybe?"

"He wouldn't dare," declared Claude. "That would expose him at once. No, he carries them with him, and we'll see to that later. Just now we know what we wanted to know, and we must get out of here!"

"Yes," growled old Andrew, "and it can't be too quickly for me."

He held up a warning finger Claude, listening, heard a scuffling in the corridor outside then approaching footsteps.

"Mon Dieu! Caught!"
