S'side Town Council Holds Annual Meeting

Mayor Campbell announces deficit of $4,197 for past year.

The annual meeting of the Summerside Town Council, which had adjourned for some time on account of the auditors not being able to complete their audit, was held last night. Mayor Campbell presiding, with Council members Smallman, Gorrill, MacNeill and Wedge being present. The Mayor reported that the financial statement could not be passed on account of the auditors not completing their task, but that he would declare the position of the town which he was sorry to say showed a deficit of $4,197. Mayor Campbell pointed out, however, that three years ago requests came in from the citizens for more permanent streets which were agreed to by the Council. Late in 1939 the town issued debentures for street work completed in 1938 with the result that the sinking fund and interest in 1940 was increased by $4,000. They had hoped to provide for this from increased light rates, but the Council had to save and reduction in the rates to large users, the hopes were not realized in 1940, but they might be able to carry on 1941. After 1942 two sinking funds will be full which will give the town an additional $500,000 for current expenses. A part of this year's deficit will be left in 1941, but the greater part will affect 1942. Mayor Campbell also pointed out that the Council had an increase of $1,000 in the grant to the school board was an additional drain on the town exchequer which would account for $1,000 of the deficit.

No Tax Increase - Mayor Campbell said he thought it would be necessary to increase the taxes and stated that the Council had decided to stay by the 17 dollar rate. He also expressed sincere thanks to the members of the press for their faithful attendance at all times and the publicity which had been given to the council meetings through the press. Council member Gorrill submitted a report for the police department.

Interesting Talk on North West territories

Mr. Ulrich Arsenault, son of Mr. Joseph A. Arsenault, a nephew of Mr. Justice Arsenault, who recently returned from the Canadian North West gave a most interesting and informative address in St. Paul's Hall on Thursday evening before a large and appreciative audience.

Mr. Arsenault revealed life in the North West as it very few have known it. He told in simple but convincing language of the trials of the pioneer and prospector in those far northern regions. Starting from 1921 when he first went west, Mr. Arsenault showed the development of the North West up to the present day when prospectors no longer have to endure the hardships of the early days. The development of the Canadian Airways service to the far north has done much to bring the comforts of civilization to the people of the North West and the devotion of the Roman Catholic and other faiths in the farthest outposts of the Arctic Circle. He also pointed out that although the cost of operating the abattoir had been reduced by $300,000 there was still a deficit of $150,000. There was some discussion regarding the matter of having animals slaughtered at the Summerside abattoir for the supply of meat to the airport. Mayor Campbell and the Council members were in favor of the suggestion and said the matter would be looked into. Mr. Arsenault expressed the hope that after the war the old fields of the North West would be developed more fully. There are tremendous possibilities there and they will not attack unless first attacked. The Back Stretch Newsy Notes

The sun would shine all day with the restrained brilliance common to a rainy day as it sank towards the horizon the level rays would shine with a prismatic splendor, and if perchance a white cloud glided into their path, it would be once clothed in rainbow iridescence. Often I paused to admire the spectacle, but I might have tried for a "mountain of Sundays" ere I guessed its cause. The color was caused by dust the British Association afterwards told us, and the dust was caused by a mild explosion, some thousands of miles away.

On August 26th, 1883, at 1 p. m., the British ship Charlie Ball was steaming through the Straits of Sunda, between Java and Sumatra. Mount Krakatoa lay about ten miles away, its volcanic peak standing quietly as it had done for the previous two hundred years. Suddenly the gale-strewn waters were astonished to see the whole island of which Krakatoa stood, go up in a flash of flame and billowing smoke seven-teen miles high! "A scene the like of which," said a canonized and showers of stones came as large as a man's head, fell on the ship's deck and made them race for shelter. Everywhere the sea was littered with a layer of volcanic pumice.

By 5 p. m. the explosions had become so violent and continuous that the people of Java and Sumatra were temporarily deafened. In Western Australia, 1,700 miles away people interpreted the noise as volcanic activity and at Rodriguez Island, nearly 4,000 miles distant it was thought to be canooding. The sound had taken four hours to reach the Island! The blast produced a rush of air whose pressure travelled several times round the world before it faded out. At that time towns were lit by huge gas lamps which were stored in huge tanks resembling the oil-tanks on the outskirts of our city. The gas-tanks however, rose and fell with the volume of gas enclosed, and had a tendency to tip over. When the airwave from Krakatoa struck the tank it showed on the gauge at towns in Europe and Australia. I have read that the effect affected towns on the Pacific Coast of America.

The explosions ended on the morning of August 27th with four blasts which were supposed to have created the biggest noise ever heard on the earth. It would be difficult to compute the amount of matter which was blown into the air. It was estimated that the airwave from Krakatoa struck the tank it showed on the gauge at towns in Europe and Australia. I have read that the effect affected towns on the Pacific Coast of America.

Some British scientists visited the Island five years later, and reported that nature had begun to mend the damage though the volcanic ash and pumice were most unpromising materials to work with. Lichens were growing freely on the rocks, and a few ferns had taken hold, helped by the steaming air peculiar to the locality. No flowering plants were to be seen, but the soil was rich with the ash which had been blown away. It was estimated that the airwave from Krakatoa struck the tank it showed on the gauge at towns in Europe and Australia. I have read that the effect affected towns on the Pacific Coast of America.

On going into the barn one day last week, Mr. Leonard Ford of Brackley Beach found an intruder which he called a sparrow, and a Saw-Whet Owl, also known as the Acadian Owl. Mr. Ford captured the bird, and built a roomy cage for it. The bird was very tame, and was interested in such matters, he brought his captive for examination. The Saw-whet is easily recognized because it is the smallest of our owls, being only 8 inches in length, and it has no "ear-tufts" like the other owls. In color it was brownish above, white below, and its sides were streaked with brown. Like most of the Owls this bird is nocturnal in its habits, so we may judge that it is in no wise harmful to the poultry-yard. Night is the time when it is out, and it does so at their own risk and they know what is about. Dr. Taverner examined the stomachs of 19 of these owls, it contained mice, one had managed to catch a sparrow, and one had supped on night flying moths.

By flying at night has its dangers. I quote from Mr. Robt. W. Tutin's "Birds of Nova Scotia." Its chief enemies are the larger owls which hunt it out and pounce on it at night. The common name "aw-whet" was taken from the call note which sounds like the noise made in filling a saw. Mr. Ford's bird expressed its disapproval of me by vigorously snapping its beak when I approached it. An Ontario naturalist has three Saw-whets which are quite tame and will light on his hand or hand. They appear to be quite tame, from a photograph which I saw lately.

TWO THOUSAND FARMERS MEET - It has often been remarked that industries of all kinds tend to locate in Central Canada, and the reason of this is not hard to find. Where their interests are concerned the inhabitants of that region know the value of pulling all together, till they get what they want. There was a meeting of farmers at New Brunswick, lately, to meet the Federal Minister of Agriculture for the purpose of laying their views before him. It was expected that 400 or 500 would be present, but 2,000 turned up and the conference had to be transferred to the auditorium of the Technical School. That was a good start for it showed a wide-spread and deep interest in the purpose of the meeting. Wood Island farmers in similar circumstances, have turned out in such force? I am doubtful.

The next admirable thing was that they had all their recommendations (or demands) brought out, crystallized, and written down; they did not get all they asked for, it is true, but there was no fumbling in the shuffling. They knew what they wanted, and one might feel safe in wagering they'll get it in the long run.

Is it only too plain that we on the Island nullify all effort to better our lot, by launching into destructive criticism often highly inoperative personalities. Under these circumstances the original object is often lost sight of, and the constructive thinker is apt to get discouraged and throw up his hands. Let us take for example from these Ontario farmers and agree on our course, instead of frittering away time and energy in trying to out-guess the other fellow. Ontario has demonstrated that "no man hath shall be given" while Prince Edward Island gets the other half of the cooperative reason? They are united and cooperate, while we are either indifferent or contentious.

THE MARKETING BOARD - I will admit that I did not feel any enthusiasm for the proposed Marketing Board when the subject was first broached, but like the Psalmist I held my peace. I got some light on the subject, Well, I have read the By-Laws of the Board and I am glad to say that they are a good many times and analysed them, and I am glad to say that they are a good many times and analysed them, and I am glad to say that they are a good many times and analysed them.
