FOR FRANCE

Who, valiant, stood at blood-red dawn;
Surveyed the fields o'er which the wrong
Of centuries had ebbed and flowed
Until her soul, indignant glowed?
France!

Who bares her breast to naked steel
To free her children from the heel
Of tyrants who would pierce her heart
And break and rend her part by part?
France!

Who holds the way for greater truth
Perceives therein immortal youth?
Who bleeds and in her mourning sore
Has strength to fend the broken door?
France!

Who, with her wounds, her blood and tears,
Has sternght of soul to conquer fears?
Still valour shines within her eyes
And sacred gleam and scorn of lies?
France!

A bugle blows at gates of dawn;
Who flings a challenge loud and strong?
"Awake, awake O faithless earth,
My pains are but the pangs of birth."
France!

STOCK NOTE.

Mr. Thomas Trainor of Windon, King's County, has purchased from Mr. David Reid, Victoria Cross a pair of Poland China pigs, one a male for public service. Two years ago he bought a boar of the same breed from Mr. Reid which proved a very profitable investment both for himself and the farmers in the neighborhood. He believes there is no better breed of pigs in existence than the Poland China.

A HARVESTER'S DIARY

June 15, 1917.—I felt in need of a rest after the crop was in; so on Wednesday morning, June 6th, I packed my suit case and lunch-basket. One of the boys drove me to a point on the shore about ten miles from home and one from where I stooked last August. He stayed till evening and we tried to catch some fish but they would not bite. In the afternoon and evening two men came in motor-cars and set nets across an inlet from the lake. In a short time one of them had sixty pounds of fish caught mostly pike; but some suckers. The last fish caught was forgotten; so I had pike for breakfast next morning. After sunset I could hear a merry party singing down the lake.

That was my first night spent alone on the prairie, with no roof but the starry dome. I slept on a sleigh robe spread on a near-by knoll, using the suit-case for a pillow, and my overcoat and blanket for covering. The night was very still and the cry of water-fowl carried far. The wind sprang up in the night and I was awakened by another sound the old familiar voice of waters lapping on the shore.

Next forenoon I went to see the folks where I stooked last summer and had dinner with them. They told me to take their flat bottomed boat; which has a square sprit sail, and cruise about the lake all I liked in it. That afternoon we had a much needed thunder shower. In the evening I took the boat to my camping-place; pulled it up and turned it over enough for shelter as it looked like rain. Jack who drove the binder last harvest is still there. He and another chap an ex-U.S. naval man, who is helping grow wheat on a Canadian farm came over to the ravine that evening to see how I was getting along. I had just finished my evening meal when they arrived. Before they left Jack had planned to come with me in the boat next morning for a couple of days. Friday morning was beautifully fine with a gentle southerly breeze, so away we went. Our plan was very simple. It was to always run before the wind, trusting it to veer and bring us back. Lost Mountain Lake is long and narrow the portion we were sailing in being from two to four miles wide. Leaving the east side we steered northwest with a very light wind, and landed on a peninsula on the west side of the lake. It was most pleasant on the water, not a fly to trouble us. Wild ducks flew, and sea-gulls circled overhead. (There are real sea-gulls on the lake.) Soon we left there and sailed north-east landing on east side of lake, where we saw the ice-boat left there last December. Going aboard we steered away north towards what appeared to be an island. As the day advanced the wind increased so we had a good breeze to send us along. At noon we landed on the shore made a fire and cooked dinner which we fully enjoyed. As we were about to leave Jack heard a splash at the waters edge and saw a large sucker which venturing too near the shore had been thrown in by a wave. He quickly threw it on dry land, so we had fresh fish for supper that evening. Continuing we sailed to our supposed island passing inlets composed of naked rocks, which rose just above the water, and landed in one of its beautiful little bays. Clumps of willows grew to quite a height here and there. We reached that place about three-o-clock, and found it so pleasant decided to stay overnight. This troubled us very little. (I don't know what has become of the mosquitoes, unless the severe frost we had the last of May put them out ofbusiness.) It must have been connected with the mainland, as we could see buggy tracks in places. We lay on the sleigh-robe and smoked, rested, read, and talked to our heart's content. After passing a comfortable night and eating a good breakfast we rested till noon. When the sun got too hot we brought the sail from the boat and rigged it up so as to shade our resting place. After dinner we started on our homeward way as the wind then blew from the northwest. After landing on the shore and getting supper we sailed to the west side of the lake to see an elderly Scotsman who lives in a shack there. Jack was slightlly acquainted with the old man, who made us most heartily welcome. Our host was in great good humour. He sang scotch songs and told stories, filling the intervals between with interesting conversation. He appears to be fairly well educated and very well read. Our new friend insisted on making tea and gave us an excellent repast before we left. He wanted us to stay all night and told us to be sure to come up for breakfast next morning. We camped on the shore beside the boat that night intending to go home next day. Sunday morning came with heavy wind and louring clouds, soon a thick mist began to fall, with heavy showers at intervals, and we were glad to accept our friend's hospitality. The wind blew and rain fell for three days and nights. It was not until the evening of the fourth day (Wednesday) that we could cross the lake.

I slept with Jack that night and had breakfast next morning. Bidding the kind old folks good by, after telephoning home. I went over to the ravine and stayed till one of the boys came for me in the buggy. We had gone nine or ten miles northward on the lake.

That portion of the country on the west side of the lake, where we were, is mostly settled by people of foreign birth. Eight brothers from Russia and their two married sisters are all settled in one neighborhood. They came with very little worldly goods, but now they own nearly a dozen sections of land between them, have good farm buildings, good horse and cattle, implements, and own a threhing outfit all in eleven years. They also have half a dozen motor cars. The threshing outfit is owned jointly. They are and very industrious, girls drive four and five horse teams. The man I was talking to is a robust intelligent fellow and speaks English fairly well. He is dubious about Russia. Thinks the Russian people are not ready for a republican form of government. Our Scottish friend, who home-steaded there some years ago, recently sold his farm to one of them, reserving his shack and an acre of land.

June 25.— We have had abundant rains since June7. The wheat is looking very well; but not so far advanced as in some seasons. I drive five big horses abreast, and ride on a sulky gang that turns two fourteen inch furrows, ploughing summer fallow. One hundred and forty acres will be ploughed. Usually two crops of wheat and one of oats are taken, then the land is left idle for a year. It is ploughed and harrowed in summer to overcome the weeds. The big crops of wheat grow on summer fallow because it retains moisture better than fall or spring ploughing.

THE LANGUAGE OF RINGS

When the coquettish dames of Spain in times gone by, carried on their correspondence and love affairs by the aid of their fans, without speaking a single word, their French sisters used rings as signs and symbols of a similar character.

A pearl or garnet ring signified that its wearer was unhappy; a thin circlet of fine turquoise intimated the fair one's inability to return her lover's sentiments; while a plain gold ring in the shape of a knot expressed her willingness to share his fortunes.

A ring in the shape of a gold serpent, with a brilliant in its head, indicated the lady's doubts of her gallant's sincerity; while her faith and her wish to confide in him always were shown by a ring and two clasped hands.
