Seek Market Now For Foxes' Teeth

OTTAWA, Dec. 17 — (C P) — Walrus teeth, once considered worthless, are a source of revenue nowadays for eastern Arctic eskimos who saw a federal official pick up a warlus skull, knock out a few teeth and put them in his pocket.

The official was Maj. D. L. McKeand, superintendent of the Eastern Arctic, who saved the teeth out of curiosity while on an inspection trip a few years ago.

Maj. McKeand told the Canadian Press today that when he went north on his next trip an eskimo handed him a bag of the teeth. He promptly took the native to a trading post and gave him a pound of tea in exchange.

So other eskimos at the post began collecting. The following season post officials said they had to give the Eskimos valuable foodstuffs in exchange or worthless teeth because of his barter the previous year. Posts in the north had 1,400 pounds of teeth and no market.

Back in Ottawa, Maj. McKeand and other oficials finally found a market in Seattle, Wash., where a dealer in warlus tusks decided to make the teeth into beads, necklaces and other ornaments

Now Maj. McKeand is going one better, he's trying to find a market for fox teeth which are plentiful in the northland.

Flu Epidemic Was Ten Months Late

TORONTO, Dec. 17 —(CP)—The epidemic which has been afflicting Canadians across the Dominion—described as "A" type influenza—is nearly 10 months late in striking, according to Dr. Ronald Hare of the Connaught Laboratories, University of Toronto.

He said the currently raging type of influenza occurs in a two-year cycle and should have struck last February. Epidemics occurred on schedule in 1933, 1935, 1937, and 1940.

"Someone may pull some cure out of a hat unexpectedly — some new drug perhaps," he said. "It may come as dramatically as the sulfa drugs, which were discovered by accident. At present, searchers for a cure for influenza are getting nowhere."

Jap Air Attacks Are Broken Up

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN NEW GUINEA, Dec. 18—(Saturday)—(AP)—United States planes providing all-important protection for ground forces securing the invasion beachhead of New Britain have broken up repeated enemy air attacks, shooting down nine bombers and five fighters, it was announced today.

Ready for the expected retaliatory air blows, which quickly followed the smoothly-won position Wednesday at Arawe on the southwest coast, these patrols took on the invaders in a constant series of sky battles. Three other raiders probably were downed. No mention was made of Allied air losses.

ALGIERS, Dec. 18—(Saturday)—(CP)—The Allied advisory council for Italy announced today its recommendation that most of southern Italy, Sardinia and Sicily be turned over to the government of Premier Pietro Badoglio subject to Allied control.

If the recommendation is accepted—as it is expected to be—it will mean that the Badoglio government will exercise the same authority throughout the defined territory as it has been exercising in three provinces in southeastern Italy.

Foreign Yuletide Customs Followed by National Groups

OLD COUNTRY PEOPLE RECALL THEM BY THEIR PARENTS AT

In Canada, the word Christmas conjures visions of steaming plum puddings (wartime style this year) and golden brown fowl. Norwegians, Netherlanders, Poles and Russians who are now living in the Dominion have an entirely different conception of Christmas, at least as far as customs are concerned. Wherever national groups gather this Chrismas season, old country customs will more than likely be the rule of the day. These will help young men and women who are homesick for their native lands bear the burden of separation until their countries or portions of their countries, are freed from the Nazi yoke.

Norwegians regard rice pudding as a very important part of their Christmas feast. In Toronto and the Muskoka District of Ontario, where young Vikings are training for big jobs ahead, the men will gather in the messes for dinner, after Church services on Christmas Day.

The first item on the menu will be rice pudding with an almond put in only one serving. The lucky person who finds the nut in this dish wins a prize. During the dinner, Aquavit, a popular Norwegian drink is always served. As Christmas is a time of rejoicing and hospitality, the Norwegians include the birds in their celebrations. Grain is scattered for the birds outside each Norwegian dwelling.

According to Polish workers now living in the Dominion, Christmas in Poland is celebrated on Christmas Eve and no food is ever cooked on the day itself. Guests are invited to dinner parties in odd numbers, three, five, seven and so on. Then a vacant place is set for any stranger who may come to the door.

To recall the manger in which the Christ Child was born, hay is spread under the tablecloth and guests pull out straws, judging by the length of the straws, the length of their lives. Following the custom of Slavic countries, the meal is served when the first star appears in the sky. And no festival is complete without "Baba". This is a kind of sweet-bread associated with the Christmas feast.

In the Russian Ukraine, the customs at Christmas are closely akin to those in Poland. The Ukranians' meal on Christmas Eve is composed of 12 courses in commemoration of the 12 Apostles. In the centre of the dinner table is set a bowl of "Kutya" a traditional dish of the Ukranians. This dish, served only twice a year, is a combination of wheat, honey, ground poppy seeds, pecans or other nuts.

The dish of "Kutya" is left in the centre of the table throughout the night. When the table is cleared several clean dishes are placed beside the dish. The legend has it that any departed spirit who may return during the night will be able to partake of a special feast.

ANCIENT LEGENDS TAUGHT CHRISTMAS

In Holland, if the mist rises on St. Nicholas' Day, December 6th, the saying is "St. Nicholas is baking for Christmas". Before the war, special St. Nicholas spiced cakes were made. These cakes were given to the young men and women of the Dutch towns and villages in the hope that they would all have sweethearts.
