ED. NOAD, left, High River, Alberta Hereford breeder and outstanding showman, is fitting a Western 10-gallon hat on Fulton Sanderson, prominen P.E.I. Hereford breeder from York Point with whom he visited several Island farms yesterday.

Visiting Hereford Man Knows Success Secret

"There are many people in our High River area of Alberta who trace their origin to your Island, and in the adjoining Pincher Creek district," Ed Noad, prominent Hereford breeder and cattle exhibitor, told the Guardian yesterday when he dropped in with Fulton Sanderson, York Point for a visit.

Here as a Canadian Hereford Association representative on the Canadian Council on 4-H Clubs, Mr. Noad visited Hereford breeders Jack MacKinnon, Brooklyn, and the Hayden Brothers, Cherry Valley whose father, Lou Hayden, is the oldest White Face breeder in the province.

"I breed Herefords on my farm"—he has 40 mature cows—said Mr. Noad who purchases and shows any top beef animals he can get, and has been most successful at the Royal Winter Fair, Toronto. There he has won the 13-year period 1947-60, three grand championships—the reference is all to steer classes—two reserve grand ribbons, 11 championships, six reserve championships, 21 firsts and 12 seconds. In the thirteen years he has had only nine steers that finished lower than second place.

He has shown Shorthorns which produced two grand champions, Herefords which produced one grand ribbon, and Angus "the only breed in which I have never been able to get a championship," he noted, but he's still trying.

LIKES ISLAND

Mr. Noad was tremendously impressed by Island hospitality—he leaves this morning—and liked the countryside, but he didn't like seeing cattle tied in stables, and predicts there'll be loose housing all over the country in 10 years.

That brought up the subject of Polled Herefords and "they have gained from nine percent in the west in 1959, to about 30 percent last year." They're also gaining in quality, though they still do not measure up to the horned White Faces, he observed.

Noting a change in conformation from a heavier forecarcass in the past and lighter hindquarters where the expensive cuts are located, to a longer and heavier hind end, Mr. Noad recalls that he predicted such a development almost 30 years ago. He suggested then that the best animal of the future would be built on a more dairy-like frame, and has seen that happen.

The trend to more practical animals has shown in the famous Calgary fall sales, for example, where the rate of gain per day has been upped from two pounds or less six years ago to two and one half pounds or more at the present time. And those bulls run about 24 months old, he explained.

They've had the "pony type" Hereford in his area, as in other parts of Canada and are rapidly breeding away from it. "But," he noted, "the old type, big, roomy beef animal was bred out of existence years ago because critics said the housewife wanted smaller meat cuts. Now the same kind of people are pushing the breed back to the bigger animals."

Here for the Canadian Council on 4-H Clubs, Mr. Noad is a firm believer in the boys and girls clubs as they were called up to a few years ago, and has been associated with them since his boyhood days.

Legion Sports Banquet Is Successful Venture

"Since the Stanley Cup was first presented some 70 years ago, hockey has grown from a sport for select, individuals to a truly great worldwide pastime and business," said former NHL refree-in-chief and now trustee for the Stanley Cup, Cooper Smeaton, last night in his "Toast to Hockey" address at the Royal Canadian Legion's banquet Centennial Salute to Hockey.

"Hockey has done nearly everything for persons in its professional ranks. Most hockey players, if they don't have the ability, will take advantage of being in the public eye and grab the right business opportunity so that their life will be success ful," said Smeaton. "Hockey has done a great deal for me."

Professional hockey, said Smeaton, is not perfect; but it is a great character builder. "If a youngster doesn't take advantage of the opportunities hockey can offer him, he is downright stupid."

HOSTS OF GUESTS

Cooper Smeaton was only one of a host of nationally known sports celebrities who took part in the Charlottetown Legion's Centennial salute to Canada's great pastime.

More than 275 persons packed the Legion's Clover Club to hear the words of Smeaton, Danny Gallivan, 'Red' Kelly, Jean Beliveau, Frank Selke Jr., Jim Trimble, Al MacNeill, Forbes Kennedy, Earl Ross, Roger Dion, and others.

A new found master of the banquet circuit, Danny Gallivan, was MC for the evening, and delighted persons with his fine introductions and comments.

'Red' Kelly said the hardest series in the recent Stanley Cup playoffs was the one the Leafs had against Montreal. He said Detroit gave their best effort in the sixth game of the finals when Baun won it in overtime.

Jean Beliveau said he was happy that Montreal finished first in the regular league standings. He drew a round of laughter when he referred to Toronto's Punch Imlach's prediction that Montreal would finish fifth by saying that Montreal, this season, was the best fifth place team in the history of the NHL.

"The NHL can't stand to lose a player of the calibre of Red Kelly", Frank Selke Jr., said in his short address. "But if he can arrange a switch to Montreal like the one that took him from Detroit to Toronto, I'd be happy to talk to him about it before we leave the Island."

Jim Trimble, who spoke of the importance of determination in sports, was introduced by Gallivan as a man who would go out of his way to support hockey, but who is a first and foremost supporter of football.

Al MacNeil, whom Gallivan referred to as one of the best defencemen in the second half of the 1964 NHL schedule, said he didn't have any excuses why Chicago didn't win their semi-final series against Detroit. "Detroit was actually a better club than people gave them credit for."

It was a great night for Forbes Kennedy. He was given a standing ovation when he moved to the mike for his brief comments and Gallivan said Kennedy has created the biggest splash, nationally, of any Islander. He credited Kennedy with having given Boston a tremendous defensive job in the past season.

BLASTS CAHA

Moncton sportscaster, Earl Ross, spoke of the manner in which Summerside Junior Legionaires had been treated in being sent home from Montreal in their recent series against NDG Monarchs, and said he held the MAHA responsible for letting it happen. "If we had a stronger representation, the Maritimes wouldn't have to take a back seat," said Ross.

"The volunteer workers of the CAHA and MAHA do their best. But they're still volunteers," said Ross. "If we can't send our best in the future we shouldn't send any at all."

Roger Dion, national physical fitness director, said that Canadian sport governing bodies needed a shot in the arm and that he hoped the country would soon have good national and international playoff systems.

1st - 5th Artillery Ass'n To Hold Annual Meet Here

Major George Craig, who commanded the 2nd Battery 1st Medium Regiment when it left Charlottetown in January 1940 for the war overseas, will lay a wreath at the cenotaph here on Saturday afternoon. Throughout the remainder of the war the regiments served first in Italy and Sicily, and then moved into Northwest Europe until the end of hostilities in 1945.

Lt. Gov. W. J. MacDonald will take the salute of the regiments as they parade from the cenotaph back to the Legion Home. Chairman for the dinner is Lt. Col. D. A. McCormick, president of the Charlottetown branch of the association.
