Chance Put Some In Line, Others Safe

SPRINGHILL, N.S. (CP)—The Springhill mine explosion brought with it a crop of stories of freakish circumstances that put some men among the trapped and others who ordinarily would have been in the mine, safely above ground when the blast occurred.

One of the missing was Douglas Lymwood, 21, working extra hours for a chum who stayed off to go deer-hunting.

Dennie Boss, on the other hand, dropped the Thursday shift to go hunting.

Among the trapped was Leonard McCormick, who had been away from work with an injury received earlier. It was his first shift back.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♣	1♠	2♣	Pass
4♣	Pass	5♣

It is not easy to arrive at the best contract of three notrump played by South which is unbeatable. It can be done if South bids two diamonds over two clubs and North then bids two spades, in which case a three notrump bid by South would be in order.

However South's jump to four clubs in the actual bidding sequence was certainly not abnormal. He had too promising a hand to bid only three clubs, which would permit North to pass.

The final contract presents an interesting problem in play. Declarer has three losers to contend with—two hearts and a diamond. The prospect of finding East with the ace of hearts, which would cut off one loser, is not too rosy considering West's overcall.

Yet, the contract is makable with proper play. The solution is not too obvious even when all four hands are examined. It takes an unusual play to bring in eleven winners.

The key lies in permitting West's king of spades to win the opening lead. West can do no better than lead another spade, on which South discards a diamond. After cashing the A-K of clubs declarer plays the ace and king of diamonds and ruffs a third round of diamonds, establishing two diamond tricks in dummy.

A low trump to dummy's jack enables declarer to discard two of his hearts on the good diamonds. The only losers turn out to be a spade and a heart.

What South does in effect, to make the hand, is to substitute a spade loser for a diamond loser. The exchange, however, permits the establishment of the diamond suit without running the risk of allowing East to obtain the lead for a heart return. If the ace of spades is taken on the opening lead, it becomes impossible to make the hand.

Nothing can be lost by ducking the spade king. If it develops that the diamonds cannot be established because they break badly, South can always fall back on the hope that East was dealt the ace of hearts.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

A Cryptogram Quotation

G M Q Q O B L U G U O S I A F J S U A "Y B J - X N J A!" N I A Q O B L U G U Y B J U F J S U A "G N F E!" — W N F N M P N Z.

Yesterday's Cryptoquote: SEE THE CONQUERING HERO COMES! SOUND THE TRUMPETS, BEAT THE DRUMS!—LEE.

BEDTIME STORIES

The Snapping Stick

Beware of seeming trifles; they Can make or ruin any day.
—Old Mother Nature.

It was a moonlight night, a lovely night. Jack Frost was abroad in the Green Forest and on the Green Meadows and the air was sharp and clear. It was good to be out and about. At least that is the way some of the Green Forest folk in fur thought about it. They prefer to be out at night rather than in the daytime. They love a night when Mistress Moon is shining bright.

"Why couldn't you have stayed in bed tonight and not been wandering about?" he demanded.

Bobby Coon is one of these. This night Bobby had started out as soon as the Black Shadows had crept through the Green Forest. He had been wholly unafraid. He had felt that there was nothing to be afraid of anymore than there had been. It was true that this was the season of hunting with dreadful guns, but the dreadful guns were put away when jolly, round, Mr. Sun went to bed behind the Purple Hills. Bobby was sorry for his neighbors who were hunted in the daytime. He had nothing to fear from these hunters that always appeared in the Green Forest at this time of year. That is what he thought anyway.

Then he had had a rude awakening. Right now he was in a quandary which means simply that he didn't know what to do. Two hunters with a Dog had come to the Green Forest especially to hunt for Bobby and his family. The Dog had found Bobby's trail and had chased him to a tree. He had managed to fool the Dog for a while by climbing over to another tree and going down to the ground that way. Then the Dog had made a big circle and once more had found his trail. He was still a long distance behind.

Bobby was standing listening and trying to make up his mind what to do next. He was worried. He was very much worried. He must fool that Dog and those hunters again or he would lose his life. Suddenly a stick snapped It wasn't of a snap, but it set Bobby's heart to beating fast. He knew that snapping stick meant that there was somebody near. Someone had stepped on that stick and broken it. That is what had made it snap. Could it be that another of those dreadful hunters was somewhere close at hand?

Before he could make up his mind which way to run Lightfoot the Deer stepped out from amid the trees. Bobby's heart seemed to leap for joy. Lightfoot was a longtime friend and neighbor. Bobby had nothing to fear from Lightfoot. When Lightfoot saw Bobby he snorted. "So you are the fellow who is making all this trouble," said he.

"I'm not making anybody any trouble. I'm the one that is in trouble," replied Bobby. "What makes you say I am making all the trouble?" he added.

"It is you that Dog and those hunters are after. But for you they wouldn't be over here in the Green Forest," declared Lightfoot.

For two of three minutes there had been no sound from that Dog in the distance. He had lost the trail and was trying to find it. It is only when he has the scent and can follow it that he barks. How Bobby Coon did hope he wouldn't hear that voice again.

But he did. It suddenly rang through the Green Forest louder than ever. Lightfoot threw up his head and snorted again. He shook his head angrily and stamped. "Why couldn't you have stayed in bed tonight and not been wandering about?" he demanded.

Ordinary Britons Are Divided By Events In The Middle East

By ROBERT RICE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

LONDON (CP) — The British man in the street is frankly bewildered by the turn of events in the Middle East.

Ordinary Britons are divided. Some are solidly behind Prime Minister Eden and his tough tactics. Others are not too sure the bombing raids—even on military targets in Egypt—are the answer

"It's about time we stood on our own two blooming feet" said one Londoner in a Fleet Street pub.

The more outspoken people seemed buoyed by the news that Britain, at last, is showing her muscles. They displayed a kind of elation that the Old Country is acting independently, without United States support.

"We've stood a lot of nonsense lately," said an elderly publican. "It's about time we stood up to some of it."

Such people reflect an attitude in the United Kingdom that Britain has been shoved around long enough.

QUESTIONS WISDOM

Others questioned the wisdom of military action.

"Bombing Cairo?" asked one man. "That's no way to settle a war."

An insurance clerk back from two years' national service said: "I don't believe in attacking Egypt at all."

There is tremendous interest in the proposition that Britain is trying to preserve the Suez Canal as a lifeline for oil supplies. Most understand that without oil Britain suffers seriously.

One Londoner, a veteran of the Second World War, said he felt that Americans almost wished Britain to lose her Middle Eastern oil fields so she would be forced to turn to the U.S for oil.

"They just want our dollar lolly," he said. Lolly is a British term for loot, or money.
