CAPITOL SUMMERSIDE

POWELL - LOY TEAM RETURNS IN NEW KIT

There's real good news for movie fans at the Capitol Theatre. William Powell and Myrna Loy are back together again as Mr. and Mrs. Thin Man in the newest and most exciting of this popular Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer series, "The Thin Man Goes Home."

When Nick decides to visit his Mother and Dad in the old home town, and sneak in a vacation for himself and Nora at the same time, they don't dream of the possibilities of becoming involved in a highly baffling murder mystery. No sooner do they get settled in Sycamore Springs, however, than they find themselves up against a more mysterious criminal whose escapades include sabotaging defense plant plans.

Involved are oil paintings, a Japanese sub-machine gun, a woman named "Crazy Mary" and other items that they all make for a more thrilling piece of entertainment. It would be unfair, of course, to give away the solution, so you'll have to find that out for yourself at the Capitol Theatre.

Widow Defends Action In N.Y. Murder Case

NEW YORK, June 8 - (AP) - Wearing a silver fox fur jacket over black mourning clothes, the elderly widow of Albert E. Langford, slain textile executive, attended his funeral today shortly after she had issued a statement describing her friendly relationship with the man and denying that she gambled at cards for high stakes.

The 65-year-old Langford was shot to death Monday night when police said they were told, he denied two men admittance to his apartment after they had asked to see his wife and she had refused their request.

Since then police have been sitting for clues in the voluminous record Mrs. Langford kept of her numerous and expensive gifts of money to ambitious young male artists.

The wealthy, 70-year-old Mrs. Langford changed her mind about attending her husband's funeral yesterday, during a brief exchange with reporters, she said, "Oh, good God, no," when asked if she would attend the services.

Police had said Mrs. Langford frequently visited night clubs and was a heavy loser at cards both at bridge clubs and in her home. Her statement the widow said: "Mrs. Langford had never run card games in her life and never played in blackjack games and never went to night clubs in the last five years, except for dinner."

The district attorney's office said Mrs. Langford told them she

Edward Kennedy Gives Interview On War End Story

NEW YORK, June 8 - (AP) - Edward Kennedy, the Associated Press correspondent who sent the story of Germany's surrender 24 hours before the Allies officially released it, says "if I had it to do over, I think I would send the story."

But with the flat statements that it was not passed by A.S.M. editors, so that Associated Press would have known exactly what it was.

Kennedy made the statement in an interview with Dwight Benton for the Times cause of Editor and Publisher.

"I thought we were there as reporters over any scoop. I think it was news," Kennedy said, "that millions of people had members of their families at the front and that every day the war continued was another day of strain for them, and that they should be told."

Benton reported that Kennedy's current status as an AP employee was "inactive" and that he had been told at the AP offices "there is nothing more to be said now."

He quoted Kennedy as saying: "I think it was most unfortunate that the war in Europe had to be broken in this manner. Far from gloating over any scoop, I think it would have been infinitely better if the authorities had let the news come out in a normal way, instead of trying to keep it bottled up."

Weighted Action Carefully He said he weighed his action for many hours.

"I believe in keeping confidences, and I have been in newspaper work for 20 years and have never been accused of violating a confidence or releasing I believe in the sanctity of agreement. I have always kept them."

"But in this case, I found myself confronted with what I believe was a conflict of rules, and what I considered my duty."

He said that when the correspondent boarded the plane Brig-Gen. Frank Allen, Allied supreme headquarters public relations officer, told us this was it. He said it was imperative that we not discuss this with anyone outside our group until the surrender was signed, and we naturally agreed to this and to the holding of the story for its release, as in all such cases.

"I made no mental reservations. I naturally assumed the release would be a reasonable one, and I had not the slightest idea, at that time, that the story would not be cleared in a normal way."

Kennedy quoted General Allen as saying during the waiting period at Reims that Staff was anxious to release the news immediately "for its possible effect in saving lives of Allied soldiers."

Political Censorship "After the signing," Kennedy said, "Allen said General Eisenhower wanted the story released immediately for this reason, but that Eisenhower's name was tied at a high political level. To me that meant just one thing—that this was not military but political censorship."

Kennedy said that after returning to Paris, the next day, "I was still considering the surrender was signed at 3:30 (p.m.)—the ethics of it—when I received word that the Flensburg radio had carried an official German announcement of Nazi surrender. We also learned that the troops at the front had released the story in various rumors were sweeping Paris."

"British Broadcasting Corporation, I understood, had received a preliminary announcement. It was reported General Eisenhower had received a message of congratulation from the King. We heard Gen. De Gaulle was going to proclaim the following day V-E day in France."

In view of this constantly expanding set of circumstances, it seemed to me more and more a matter not to put out the story. However, the final decision was based on the one point—that we had been assured the sole purpose of censorship was military security, and no military security was involved.

Kennedy said General Allen released more than $100,000 in furthering the career of Red aviation. A night club and opera singer, who police say she once accompanied on an extended trip to Canada.

"Mrs. Langford was not a night club frequenter," said the widow's statement, "except when Mr. Langford and she tried to sponsor an engagement."

The statement added: "Mrs. Langford has never travelled with any man alone in her life. She has made trips with her chauffeur, her chauffeur's wife and a companion."
