Bonus For Winter Building Described As 'Costy Flop'

EDMONTON (CP)—The $500 federal incentive bonus to encourage winter building was "a costly flop," says Edmonton builder C. J. McConnell, president last year of the National Housebuilders Association.

He predicted the government might have to pay twice as much as the $20,000,000 allocated for the program.

Administration alone would cost at least $1,000,000 and probably more, he said, but another aspect of the scheme promised to make it more expensive.

Mr. McConnell, one of Edmonton's largest house builders said the $500 bonus for purchasers of new houses made it possible to buy a new house for $100 down—and sometimes less. A situation was created whereby the government through the National Housing Act was insuring mortgages on down payments of $100.

"Several years ago," he said, "the NHA was insuring mortgages on houses of the same general calibre for $1,000."

The problem, he said, is that owners with small equity are free to walk out at almost any time, necessitating costly legal proceedings before the NHA can take over the house again.

"Granted, some of the money can be recovered when the houses is sold a second time, but the situation still ties up government money," he said.

Mr. McConnell said speeding up a man's ability to purchase a house in the manner provided by the winter works plan is a borrowing process rather than a process of creating buyers.

"The plan borrowed buyers who would purchase their own homes a year or two later."

He said those buyers must be replaced if the building industry is to remain on a level keel.

"The bonus was advertised in a manner to indicate that the benefit to the purchaser is $500," Mr. McConnell said, "but this is true only if the purchaser lives in one of the few areas in Canada where climate does not involve extra building costs.

"The direct benefit to the home purchaser in most of Canada is much less."

He said the operation of the bonus plan has created tremendous surges of activity in small segments of the housing industry.

"There were 30,000 bathtubs needed in one month; none the next. There were 30,000 sets of light fixtures required another month; again, none the next. There were 30,000 roofs to be shingled in one month and 30,000 floors to be sanded in another month; again none the following month.

"This crazy kind of operation is vastly inefficient, wasteful of labor . . . and therefore costly."

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1♦	Pass	1♠	Pass
2♠	Pass	2♦	Pass
4♠

Opening lead — five of clubs.

Let's suppose that declarer is playing a hand where the outcome is uncertain because it depends primarily on how the adverse cards are divided.

If declarer in such case has a choice of different ways of playing the hand, he should naturally assume a distribution of the defenders' cards that will permit the contract to be made. To play on any other basis would be a losing policy that could not logically be justified.

The same general theory applies to the defending side. A defender does not see the declarer's hand and therefore also has to make assumptions in choosing his line of defense, but it would be foolish of him to credit declarer with a hand that would make the contract unbeatable.

Instead, the defender assigns to declarer a hand reasonably consistent with the bidding which permits the contract to be defeated. The defender will frequently be wrong in this assumption, but he cannot afford to play otherwise.

Here is a case in point. East wins the opening lead with the ace of clubs and has to decide on his course of defense. He realizes that if South has the ace of diamonds, there is no chance of beating the contract, so he automatically assigns the ace to West.

This means that his side has three defensive tricks (three aces), but presents the question of how and where to obtain the setting trick. Obviously, there is no hope of West's taking a trump trick, so the only real chance of stopping the contract lies in winning a second heart trick.

For this to be possible, West needs the queen of hearts. East therefore mentally assigns it to him and accordingly returns a low heart at trick two, West playing the queen and dummy the king.

It does not matter what declarer does after this return. As soon as West gets in with the ace of diamonds he returns a heart to defeat the contract.

Douglas Backs Flag Proposal

OTTAWA (CP)—New Democratic party leader T. C. Douglas said here he personally would go along with a distinctive Canadian flag designed around a maple leaf if that is what the government is going to propose.

He was commenting in an interview on a speech by Prime Minister Pearson before the Royal Canadian Legion in Winnipeg Sunday, in which Mr. Pearson said such a flag would be a true reflection of the new Canada.

Mr. Douglas said his party is on record as favoring a distinctive new Canadian flag, but NDP MPs have not discussed their choice as the government had not submitted a design to Parliament yet.

The NDP leader said he thinks the Liberal government has already made a decision about the flag, but he was afraid the whole flag issue was "leading us down a blind alley."

Canada had many social and economic problems, which would not be solved by providing a new flag.

A flag was a symbol of unity and purpose, he said, but unity and purpose did not result from having a flag. Positive programs were needed to form the framework of unity within the country.
