RC Church Presses Fight For Reform Move In Brazil

By ROBERT BERRELLEZ

RECIFE (AP) — The Roman Catholic Church has plunged into the fight for social reform in Brazil's northeast with more zeal and determination than ever was applied by left-wing extremists.

This has rekindled hope—and stirred some anxieties—among the people in this area, a great incubator of want, unrest, despair and hardened optimism.

The shape of the church's efforts may bring it into conflict with the reform policies of the new interim government headed by Marshal Humberto Castello Branco. This, in turn, may expose the true scope of the government's professed reformist spirit.

These developments are shaping up in a 475,000-square mile corner of Brazil, larger in area than California and Texas combined and with nearly as many people—22,000,000.

TOO MANY PEOPLE

In simplest terms, the trouble here is too many people, not enough productive land. Humans are so numerous and agricultural resources so scarce, it's sometimes cheaper to hire men to do the work of animals. Humans get paid in food and consume less than their four-legged competitors.

Severe periodic droughts compound the harshness of a situation normally so desperate some 100,000 northeasterners go away every year in search of a better life. The gap is more than filled by a birth rate — 650,000 more humans to feed every year.

Mass resettlement schemes and light industrialization seem among the most promising solutions. A major obstacle to both is the capability of a population 70 per cent illiterate.

In the front-line trenches of the war on misery has moved Recife's new archbishop, Most Rev. Helder Camara, 55.

TRANSFERRED FROM RIO

Dom Helder — as everyone calls him—was transferred here from Rio de Janeiro recently. The change was prompted by have resulted from pressures by Guanabara State (Rio) conservatives. Governor Carlos Lacerda among them, who felt the prelate's aggressive campaign on behalf of the underprivileged might be construed as support for left-wing extremists.

This may be the reason for some apprehension about the church's objectives among large landholders and sugarmill owners in this area. Dom Helder made his mission clear the day he took over the archdiocese. He told a cheering crowd "a little generosity and social assistance" were not enough for the northeast's problems.

With the 4th army commander, Gen. Justino Alves Bastos, at his side, Dom Helder added: "Let us not think the problem is restricted to a few limited reforms. Let us avoid confusing the beautiful and indespensable idea of order—goal of all human progress—with its imitations which are responsible for structures everyone agrees can no longer be upheld."

Gilberto Freyre, Brazil's eminent sociologist, is among those who think Dom Helder's ways are "a bit too demagogic."

MAY GO TOO FAR

"He is right about many things," said Freyre, "but he is likely to go too far, promise too much, in getting his points across."

In any case, the sociologist added, the reforms Dom Helder is preaching are basically the objectives of the leaders of the April military upheaval who long regarded them as vital to the country's stabilization but which the civilian leadership either was unwilling or unable to achieve.

"They'll be carried out now," Freyre predicted, "with collaboration of all levels of the community and a minimum of danger from ideological pitfalls."

The danger of a Cuban-style communization of Brazil, he said, opened the eyes of the upper classes to the need for dramatic changes.

There is hardly any doubt the landowners will cooperate, willingly or otherwise, with military-backed reforms. The ultimate question is how sweeping these changes will be.

MINISTERS WILL MEET

LONDON (Reuters)—The foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, France and West Germany will attend a working dinner meeting at The Hague Monday night, an authoritative source said here Friday. The four foreign ministers will be in The Hague for the ministerial council session of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Tuesday to Thursday.

Murder Appeal Is Turned Down

OTTAWA (CP—The Supreme Court of Canada has dismissed an appeal by Georges Marcotte, 32-year-old Montreal carpenter, against his capital murder conviction for the machine-gun slaying of a Montreal policeman.

Marcotte, scheduled to be hanged May 29, was found guilty in March, 1963, of capital murder in the so-called "Santa Claus" bank holdup in St. Laurent, Que., in December, 1962.

Constables Claude Marineau and Denis Brabant were killed in a gunfire exchange with the bandits.

Marcotte's only hope of escaping the death penalty in commutation of his sentence to life imprisonment by the federal cabinet.

He was convicted in Montreal of the slaying of Constable Marineau only. Marcotte also was charged with the Constable Brabant's murder but has not been tried on that count.

Jean - Paul Fournel and Jules Reeves also were charged with capital murder in the double shooting, described as the Santa Claus holdup because one of the bandits wore a Santa suit.

Fournel's trial is tentatively set for June 8. Reeves, who suffered a cerebral blood clot a few days after the double murder, has been declared mentally unfit to stand trial.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
3♥	3 NT	Pass	6♣

Opening lead — ten of spades.

The most difficult part of good dummy play is to figure out how the opponents' cards are divided. Obviously, if you could see all four hands at the start of play, you would seldom have trouble making the maximum number of tricks.

Almost every hand contains clues to help declarer determine the composition of the adverse cards, and in most deals he should play just as effectively as though all hands were exposed. The bidding, the opening lead, and the subsequent play all combine to help a competent declarer obtain the maximum result.

For example, take this deal where declarer lost a slam because he failed to draw proper inferences from the information at hand.

West led the ten of spades. Declarer took the ace, drew two rounds of trumps, played a spade to the king, and led the king of hearts. When East followed low, he ruffed. He then played a spade to the queen, hoping for a 3-3 break, but when West showed out, he had to go down one, losing two diamond tricks later when he led a diamond to the king.

If declarer had to read the hand correctly, he would have made the contract. He failed to take advantage of two clues that pointed the way to the proper method play.

He should have known from the bidding that West had a string of hearts headed by the ace, with very little side strength, and that East therefore had the ace of diamonds. He should also have read West's opening lead as showing a doubleton spade.

He should therefore have won the ten of spades, drawn two rounds of trumps, cashed the king of spades, ruffed the king of hearts, and then played every one of his trumps, reducing all hands to three cards.

At this point dummy would have the Q-9 of spades and king of diamonds, while East would have the J-8 of spades and ace of diamonds. A diamond lead would then put East out of commission.

CARDIGAN
