Odds and Ends.

A female elephant is known by the size of her trunk.

A workman is known by his chips, and a barber is known by his shavings.

The quiet fellow in the corner who lets his rival do all the talking, generally marries the girl.

If you don't want to be robbed of your good name, do not have it printed on your umbrella.

A hypocritical scoundrel in Athens inscribed over his door: "Let nothing evil enter here." Diogenes wrote under it: "How does the owner get in?"

"Here I've been sent to prison for stealing, and now they set me to cut pasteboard soles to be stuck between the leather soles of boots. Do you call that honest?"

A country clergyman was a good deal astonished one day by the jollility of the mourners at the "breakfast" of a funeral, and was gravely told in explanation: "Bless you, sir, they're not laughing—they're only dissembling their grief."

Smith had met Brown with his bride. They had just returned from their wedding tour. "Where are they going to live?" "I don't know. He told me he had been house-hunting since yesterday morning, and intended to take a flat." "Ah, indeed. He has then decided to follow his wife's example."

A young lady became so much dissatisfied with a person to whom she was engaged to be married, that she dismissed him. In revenge, he threatened to publish her letters to him. "Very well," replied the young lady; "I have no reason to be ashamed of any part of my letters except the address."

A young American lawyer lately concluded his argument in a case of trespass with the following sublime burst: "If, gentlemen of the jury, the defendant's hogs are permitted to roam at large over the fair fields of my client with impunity, then—yes, then indeed have our forefathers fought, and bled, and died in vain."

Court (to prosecutor): "Then you recognize this handkerchief as the one which was stolen from you?" Prosecutor: "Yes, your Honor." Court: "And yet it isn't the only handkerchief of the sort in the world. See this one I have in my pocket is exactly like it." Prosecutor: "Very likely, your Honor; I had two stolen."

How can they grow a pillow-slip
In the midst of a feather-bed,
And how can a horse-fly over a ship
Or an ink-stand on its head?
How can a wheel-barrow anything,
And when does a butter-fly?
Will the garden-rake itself next spring?
We pause for a reply.

A Horse Swims for Three Hours.

Though not exactly a sporting item, all lovers of the horse will be interested in the account of the following feat of a horse at Glenelg. A stray horse on the sands was observed to make his way into the water and deliberately swim out to sea. People on the jetty watching the event expected him to proceed perhaps one hundred yards or so and then return, but one hundred yards grew into a quarter of a mile, and the quarter swelled to the half, and still the horse kept on his seaward course. People naturally wondered how far out this latest long-distance swimmer would proceed, but on he went until his body was but a speck on the horizon, and he was fully three miles from shore. Then he turned round and leisurely returned toward land, and struck in the direction of the entrance of the Patawalonga Creek. When quite close to land some boys frightened him, and he cooly turned to the left and swam down the coast another mile, eventually landing midway between Hen Henley Beach and Glenelg, after being fully three hours in the water. Dozens of people watched the occurrence, which was the subject of no end of wonder.—Sydney (Australia) Referee.

Trouble at an Eviction.

A riotous scare occurred on the Clonroe estates, the property of James Byrne, about ten miles from New Cross, County Wexford, Ire. A final batch of convictions were about being executed, and as the district had recently been quiet and undisturbed, only a small body of police was deemed necessary to effect the evictions. On the approach of the bailiffs and emergency men, the house was found to be barricaded, and a defensive party inside. The evicting force was repulsed with sticks and stones, and the ringing of the church bell coused a large crowd to assemble. Several police and bailiffs were severally injured, and the landlord's agent barely escaped with his life.
