Windblown Look Is Featured

MONTREAL (CP) — Creations with a forward "wind blown" look were featured Friday at the spring and summer collection of Montreal designer Raoul-Jean Foure, president of the Association of Canadian Couturiers.

Designs with such names as zephyr, mistral, and green wind breezed through in crepes, jersey silks, cotton tweeds and linens in delicate spring shades.

The wind blown look is achieved by Foure's switch from back to front interest. Backs were smooth and untouched, while soft front fullness and draping was achieved through gores, bias and pleating.

Diagonal crosslngs, long, flowing scarfs and some cowl necklines emphasized the forward look. Waists came either above or below the natural waistline. Soft belts were used to encircle the low waist, while folds and seaming made flattering empire lines.

Colors ranged from all shades of yellow—Foure's favorite spring color—into delicate greens, lime and linden. Navy blue and white were also popular. One dress and coat costume was in lilac burlap.

Silk mousseline trimmed short dresses and formal gowns. In the group of long gowns, some had uneven hemlines, dipping at the back.

A number of two-piece creations gave the effect of long camisoles with cardigan jackets.

Foure didn't forget the chill breezes of early spring, and showed a collection of elegant small furs from capes in Arctic white, Norwegian blue and dyed black fox to mink, seal and Russian broadtail short jackets.

presentations were made by Sister Elva Ives. Sister MacInnis was unable to attend the meeting and will be presented with her certificate at a later date.

At the conclusion of the meeting members adjourned to the Banquet Room where refreshments were served by the Committee, and the decorated birthday cake was cut by Charter members Sister Helen Acorn and Brother Ernest Worth. A social hour then followed.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Repairman Called Because Announcer Long Faced

"And it was funny - at least I thought it was," Alex related on a visit this morning. "You see, this woman called up a repair - man when the TV went astray. And he wanted to know how it was acting. And she told him the pictures came in clear enough, but they weren't like they should be. She said 'For example, the man who gave the news this morning had a very, very long face.'"

"And," Alex chuckled, "the repair - man said, 'Madam, if you were reading the news these days on the TV, your face would be pretty long too!'" Because the boundaries of the world are not the far-off distances of once, and the remote places of the earth have now become neighbours to us, and their ills and troubles ours, it does seem that the news world-wide is often discouraging. And while we would not discount it, we remember that we live in an exciting age, which expects the sensational, and that by and large today's news is lost in the shade of tomorrow's, we make some allowance for this. Nevertheless, we admit, there are times when we must come to a door to look out on the familiar scenes about, to re-assure ourself, that over and about and above all that is disturbing, all is well: the white fields reach away. In dark velvet against them, the trees and woodlands stand. There is our wilding of apple tree, bare branches limned on an horizon, waiting for its blossoms. East gives the sun. West takes him home. Evening lights her star. The Lady Moon rides. Yes, no matter what comes or goes, "The earth's fullness" as we on farms know it, remains.

In a drift of small, light wings, chick-a-dees came down from a neighboring bushland, to be transient guests at Alderlea today, and of much interest to a lad of the place.

"I heard a bird call," Alex reported. "And," he smiled, "I thought to myself 'Here now is our first robin! And I listened hard. . .and," he nodded, "I knew! Robins don't say 'Dee-dee-dee.'"

"I wonder," he questioned on another thought, "where the juncoes are that last winter used to come down to the verandah for the crumbs you shook from the tablecloth?"

"I'm wondering, Ellen," James said watching icicles drip today, "if we had any grass-seed left over last spring?"

"Just one sack-50 pounds of it," we said.

"You know it won't be too long now, before we can reckon up just how much we'll be needing this year!"

"Got away!" Curiosity remarks with a disappointed gasp, looking up from his nap. "I must have been dreaming! But I was sure I had my paw-this very paw," he grins, "on a 'wee timorous creature! And now, alas," he sighs, "I find it was only a dream!"

"They say we should hold to them," we say.

"Hold to. . .a mouse!"

"No. To our dreams."

He smiles absently.

"It was big. . .my, my, so big," he murmurs, "and he got away."

Today's hours too have almost vanished, one by one as sheep over a stile, and above them was a deck of quiet skies.

Until tomorrow — — Diary—Good-night. . .
