OYSTER LIC ENFORCED TO STOP TYPHOID FEVER

Board of Health Passes Law Compelling New York Dealers to Take Out Permits--Doctors Think that Oysters Spread Fever Germs.

NEW YORK, April 13—Members of the board of health at a special meeting yesterday added a section to the sanitary code making it necessary for any one dealing in oysters to take out a special permit. The new law becomes operative at once and applies not only to oyster dealers but to restaurants and hotels.

Discovery by health department officials that a large percentage of the oysters sold in the New York market are infected with germs of typhoid fever caused the action regarding permits. The text of the new section follows:— "No oysters shall be held, kept or offered for sale in the city of New York without a permit in writing from the board of health, and subject to the rules and regulations of said board."

WONDERLAND

Continued from page 1 his wonderful work, and full of the magic of the East he ceeps his watchers fascinated with all the various phases of his weird performances. The pictorial program for tonight is "The Ship Owner's Daughter," a grand film, depicting the unfortunate course of one who loved wisely but without the fair one's approbation. The sea scenes are magnificent—the tints of moonlight exquisite—and the story ends happily after all. "I'm Mourning for the loss of Chloe, savors of the mournful, but ends very differently. "The Scullion's Dream is a wonderful picture—a bit weird and uncanny, but thoroughly fascinating in its unique features. "The Extra number is by request, and is the "Flower of Youth." "The hymns of the Old Church Choir" is the biggest hit in the song line which has been given for a long time, and Mr. Trainor does it full justice. The familiar hymns appeal to all, and the chorus is demanded over and over again. It is refined and select entertainment at Wonderland for this week and worthy of the best patronage.

offender open to heavy punishment. Inspectors from the health department will visit every place of business where oysters are handled to obtain samples of oysters for bacteriological examination. Dealers who handle contaminated oysters after they have been notified their supplies are bad, will forfeit their permits.

"We have been trying for four years to stop traffic in polluted oysters," Commissioner Darlington said, "but it has been slow work. Our investigations have proved that oysters are freshened and fattened in badly contaminated waters all around New York. In Long Island, Staten Island and New Jersey, many beds from the original beds, where oysters are freshened are in the neighborhood of sewer outlets. "Bacteriological examinations made in our laboratory by Dr. W. H. Park demonstrated that oysters taken from these beds were full of typhoid bacilli. Those oysters were all right when taken from the original beds, but they absorbed the pollution when placed in the freshening pools. All oysters gathered in the bay are full of germs. I cannot say what percentage of the New York supply is contaminated, but it is large."

After long and careful investigation inspectors made report on the sources of oyster supply for New York, which said in part:— "The investigation carried on by the Department of Health demonstrates conclusively two things—that the beds from which oysters are taken for consumption in this city often lie in grossly polluted waters; that the process of freshening fattened or drinking, often performed as it is in small streams, badly contaminated with sewerage, is a most dangerous practice and should be discontinued."

Pursuing the same policy that he followed in the department's campaign for pure milk, Commissioner Darlington will send inspectors out of town to investigate the fattening beds whence come the oysters New York eats. Without knowing their origin, it would not be possible to eliminate the polluted oysters from the market.
