ELLEN'S DIARY

Shiney Names Brighten Greyest Summer Days

Showers and lowering clouds today were our portion weatherwise, though odd times they lifted to allow the sun to shine through. It is on such a day, in a spell of continuing damp weather, we remember that someone has said: "For rainy days, it is good to have a litany of shining names to say over to oneself. Mine runs like this: A cock's crow, a mist of dewlons, a thrush in the deep woods, moving pines, and water seen through trees. These are the words that start a ripple in mind, sending out circles on circles of crystal, until the world seems to shine."

Not that we actually needed to recite our litany today for in the flashes of sunlight, there was a sheen and a sparkle on blade and leaf and all was washed clean. Then one caught too the bright, now here, now there in the branches about, and presently heard the exquisite flow of the wild canarys song.

"Hear that!" Mack smiled, listening.

The little goldfinch sits in her rose-arbor. And up in a piggery with the sun between showers shining in to bless the scene, the children came upon unexpected treasure — trove. Alex kneeling there, looked up, a mist of love in his eye. "I was happy when Tabby-you can always depend on her for kittens — gave us three, over in the sun between showers. And borne on a damp wind we saw a drift of petals from the blossoming snowball trees, mark their full season of bloom. Never before, have they flowered so beautifully — the old and younger trees — as they have this year.

Showers today, and spots of sunshine. Now the stars commence to blossom out. And the new moon salls the blue toward the west. A wet moon? A dry?

As James said when someone wondered about it this evening, "Time will tell!"

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night.....

came by with a pan of pellets for the young pigs (here.

"Can't you see — it's kittens!" Alex chuckled softly.

"Dear me, why so it is!" James exclaimed with some dismay. "And what are you going to with these?"

Alex looked up in surprise. "Why, keep them, of course!"

"But we already have those in the barn!"

"I know! But if you just take a look at these, you'll see they'll make better mousers than those. Yes, gold cats are mostly pretty good cats" he smiled.

And today tidbits were carried to the littlest cat, a mother nows, who kept her small, blind ones at her side.

"There'll be no weeding today" James said this morning watching the eves drip then.

"Nor shingling" the carpenter observed.

However there was other work about-other missions to be done. Among these a further supply of shingles was brought in: red for a house-roof. And for other shingling, the cedar that, all in all, seems to please us the best —

"Oh Vendrels," and Lois and Leta MacLeod with the song, "I Love the Silver in your hair."

Mrs. Maurice Cousins voiced her pleasure in being able to be present and congratulated the group on their very fine sewing.

Later about 30 guests sat down to a delicious salad tea. Thanks was expressed by the president and girls to all who had helped them to have a "lovely afternoon".

The National Anthem concluded the day.
