ECZEMA IN RASH ON HANDS Troubled For Three Years. Healed by Cuticura.

"I was troubled with eczema on my hands for three years. It appeared in a rash and then formed blisters. It troubled me much worse in winter so I could hardly put my hands in water or be near heat. My hands were terribly inflamed and disfigured. I had to wear old gloves to keep from scratching. I saw a Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertisement and sent for a free sample. I got relief from it so I bought more and after I had used them for three months I was healed." (Signed) Miss Beatrice Aiken, Highwater, Que. CHAPTER 47 FRESH SUSPICION

Jack Farquhar was announced in the midst of Lila's perturbation over Siddon's infamous demand. It seemed incredible to her that the butler who presented Farquhar's card with the automaton-like demeanor of the perfect servant could be the same man who, fifteen minutes before, had practically black-mailed her.

She looked pale and tired when she descended to greet Farquhar. But she hadn't even in her mental turmoil, forgotten to don hat and gloves to give the impression of just having arrived in the house. At the sight of her, Farquhar's heart smote her. He was instantly ashamed of his suspicions.

"Lila," he said, as he took her hands in his, "forgive me. I did a rotten thing this morning. I called on your friend, Mrs. Ware, to ask her to intercede with you for my sake."

Lila nodded wearily, and laid aside her gloves and hat. "I know," she told me. Jack, how could you distrust me so?" He resented that a trifle. "Have you been quite square with me, Lila. Why, for instance, did you tell me that Mrs. Ware was old and an invalid?"

"I was only joking. I didn't think it really mattered to you what she was like. She's really frightfully attractive, isn't she?" "Very!" said Farquhar, with such emphasis that Lila looked at him curiously. "And she's as sweet and good as she is pretty," Lila went on, with the warm glow at her heart that she always felt when she thought of Dorothy.

"I can well believe it. What is Mr. Ware like?" he asked abruptly. "A splendid man!" declared Lila, enthusiastically. "Truly remarkable. Clever and kind and handsome and all that!" Farquhar was eyeing her sharply. "You seem unnecessarily fervent in your praise of him," he remarked jealously.

Lila checked herself hastily. "Well, you see, I'm so fond of them I..." she explained hurriedly. "Have they been married long?" "Not quite six months."

"Oh!" said Farquhar significantly. His brows had drawn together. "Was this Ware, at one time an admirer of yours?" Lila was routed by the unexpectedness of the question. She hated to lie, where Herbert was concerned; she felt a sort of superstitious fear about it.

"Well—er—" reluctantly, and then, quickly: "Oh, Jack, whatever made you think of such a thing?" "Never mind, I'm answered," he returned grimly. "Good Heavens, is there any one you haven't been flirting with?"

LONDON LETTER

(British United Press.) Ministers at Play.

"Over the hills and far away" is the song of the Cabinet (and Cabinet makers) now that Parliament has risen.

As a whole the Cabinet contains quite a high percentage of sportsmen. "Winston," who, of course, can play at anything from pitch and toss to manslaughter, is like unto Jehu the son of Nimshi, when he drives or rides, and he can swim as strongly against the waves of the sea as he can against those of the Opposition.

"Jix," too, though he is normally, or should be, a man of peace, is a marksman of repute, and for the nonce he will doff the long-tailed morning coat in which he lives and moves and has his parliamentary being.

On the other hand, Sir Laming Worthington Evans, the Secretary of State for War, does not go out on the moors against the grouse laden with artillery, but he is an excellent hand on the links.

Neither Mr. Baldwin nor either of the Chamberlains seem to have any special sport in which they excel, but the Premier loves to tramp along the lanes of his native Worcestershire. Mrs. Baldwin, however, retrieves her husband's reputation, inasmuch as in her younger days she was a phenomenally good girl-cricketer, and even now her hand has not lost its cunning.

In Days of Old. Not many of the Old Brigade who sat with "Dizzy" in the House of Commons remain in the land of the living, but Sir William Hart-Dyke, who has just reached his 91st birthday, is one of that rapidly diminishing band.

Sir William, who was born within a few weeks of Queen Victoria's accession to the Throne in 1837, entered Parliament as long ago as 1865 and did not retire until 1906—a parliamentary life of 41 years.

He tells some entertaining stories of the time when he was Chief Whip in Disraeli's administration from 1874 to 1880. In those far-off Victorian days there pertained to the Whip's office the privilege of appointing certain customs' boatmen. Exercising this privilege, Sir William gave a job to a mariner of Margate. Not long afterwards, while Sir William was working in dignified state at the Treasury, there appeared unto him his beneficiary dragging behind him a trail of cod-fish which would have served to feed, and did in fact serve to perfume, the Treasury for a week.

Kitten And Hawk

(By British United Press.) GENEVA, August 27.—A romance of an unusual type, which began two months ago on the terrace of a Swiss villa overlooking Lake Geneva, has just ended because "He" felt the time had come to regain his freedom.

"He" is a ferocious-looking fish-hawk, about the size of a small eagle, of the rapacious species which haunt the lakes in Switzerland. After being taken from his parents' nest in a lofty pine among the cliffs above Chillon he was put on a regime of raw meat, of which he devoured large quantities daily.

Soon there came into his life a mischievous Persian kitten, his senior in age if not in appetite. She, too, was fond of raw meat, and straightaway elected to take "pension" with him.

So thumny did the ill-assorted pair become that every meal-time found her sitting in the basket on the terrace beside him. Often she would grab a particularly tasty morsel from his beak and when, by way of rebuke, he gave her a harmless peck she retaliated with a gentle cuff on the head.

The day he discovered he could fly she sat in the nest at dinner-time, a picture of feline dejection. But the truant was not long absent. He had been obliged to make a forced landing in an adjacent tree where there was a rook's nest, but was quickly bundled out again by the outraged parents, whose cries brought a host of other rooks hurrying to the spot.

Most of the following day he spent balancing himself on the overhead electric wires of the Simplon line, a hazardous occupation which he quickly abandoned at sight of the attractive supper placed near his nest.

But alas, there was no kitten to welcome him back. While chasing a cheeky sparrow she had slipped from a third-floor balcony and dislocated a joint. When eventually she was able to hobble back to the nest it was only to find that her idyl was over.

Scanning the great blue dome above the hawk had seen a tiny speck. It was one of his own kind, maybe his long-lost mother, hovering above her prey. With one loud screech he swung into the air and disappeared from view.

FOURTEEN SAILORS SWEEP OVERBOARD TO DIE IN OCEAN Balboa, Canal Zone, Aug. 27.—A report that 14 members of the crew of the steamer William A. Mackenzie of the Mystic Steamship Line were swept overboard in a cyclone of the coast of Lower California, Aug. 9, was confirmed on the arrival of the vessel here today. The original report was signalled to a passing ship as the Mackenzie's Guards Blue and those of the Life Guards whose white plumes are no longer permitted to shine amidst the ranks of war. The heat-wave lately has been a forecast of another world. The Foot Guards—padded, tightly fitted, bearing on their heads the famous bearskin of some 2½ pounds weight—have indeed been sorely tried, but their burden has been light compared with that of the cavalry. Nurse maids and their wide-eyed infant charges have stood daily in Whitehall, gazing, not always mutely, with admiration at statuesque (but privately blaspheming) warriors encased in glittering steel breast and back plates, wearing jack-boots of surprising brilliance and helmets of surpassing weight.

Truly the soldier's lot, like the policeman's, is not always a happy one. Nor a cool.

"Amazing—so many women must learn this from others" —writes a Toronto hostess

The embarrassment of this grave social offense is finally ended. This scientific sanitary pad is now treated by patented process to end all offense.

WHERE smart women gather socially—or in business—even the most attractive are guilty of offending others at certain times. Yet they, themselves, seldom realize it. When told, they become miserably self-conscious. They try in vain to overcome the difficulty by makeshift methods. Now science offers safe and certain relief from this feat.

Kotex now scientifically deodorizes Millions of women have learned to depend on Kotex within the last ten years. It has brought them better health, greater peace-of-mind under trying conditions. Now comes an added advantage: Kotex chemists have discovered (and patented) a process that absolutely ends all odors. After several years of research, the one remaining problem in connection with sanitary pads is solved.

No more bulky outlines That awful feeling of being conspicuous because of the bulkiness of old-time methods is gone, too. Kotex pads are rounded and tapered so there is no evidence of sanitary protection when worn. You may add or remove layers of filler as needed—a thing all women appreciate. There is a new softness, because both filler and gauze have been specially treated. Finally, Kotex is so easy to dispose of, eliminating all need of laundering.
