MARY HAWORTH

Beau Walked Out, But She Can't Forget Him

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 23 years of ago and very upset and confused. For about five years I have been in love with one fellow.

When I was 18 I went with him for approximately one year. I don't know what happened to cause our break-up.

I see him very often and when I do I eat my heart out because he doesn't pay any attention to me.

How rekindle his interest?

I feel there is still a spark in his heart and would like your advice on how to ignite it.

I am sure he is the boy for me, the person I would like to marry. Please answer soon as I am desperate. L.B.

DEAR L.B.: When a dating alliance breaks off, for reasons the girl can't fathom, usually it means that the boy's fancy has been attracted (and directed) elsewhere. He begin to day dream of the new attraction (as yet unexplored and a mystery to him.) and his interest in the erstwhile "steady girl friend" goes into eclipse.

And when, as and if either boy or girl is weaned away from an old faithful love by a brand-new romance, something is lost that can never be restored.

That's why, when any two persons are so fortunate as to achieve a satisfactory mutual love, they should exercise the utmost vigilance to protect it from passing winds of enticement that may do irreparable harm, if allowed to blow up a storm.

Persons who've been sweethearts, seemingly indissoluibly close, then parted by circumstances or counter-interests which lead to new emotional investments, sometimes return (figuratively) in search of each other. But the persons they were, they no longer are.

Their former relationship is a finished scroll.

If their sense of affinity is indestructible, even so, if their spirits cry out for reunion, then they'll just have to start over, building from scratch like new acquaintances. But there will be an awkwardness, a self-consciousness and also a sort of melancholy about the restoration venture that will make it forever a poor second best, as compared to the spontaneous mutual delight of the original attraction.

In my judgment, you aren't so much in love with this one fellow as you are mired in a rut of social stagnation. You need to lift yourself by the bootstraps out of that predicament.

Change jobs (I assume you're employable). Move to another town. Train yourself in new skills: folk dancing, plane flying, figure skating, skin diving, flute-playing, you name it. Join a "little theater" group of amateur actors. Or a church-sponsored study group. Or do nurse's aide work in your leisure time.

Save your money and buy a car. Or travel: going abroad by air; or on an island cruise. Get into the thick of political effort in the upcoming national election. Make yourself useful at such essential volunteer tasks as stuffing envelopes, doing typing, telephoning and the like, in support of your party or candidate.

In the field of human relations, it is more magnetic to be interested than interesting, someone has said. And to the extent that you become interested in many things, you will become interesting to other people. Thus, you see I am urging you to take the roundabout way of catching a beau, and, incidentally, of rekindling the man's interest if it can be done. M.H.

Two Big Civil Service Groups Moving Closer To Merger

By ROBERT RICE

OTTAWA (CP)—The two biggest civil service organizations in the federal field are moving closer toward a merger into one united body representing more than 100,000 federal government employees.

Leaders of the two bodies have agreed in principle on some of the key provisions of a draft constitution spelling out the basic form and function of a new, unified organization.

The merger talks involve the 32,000-member Civil Service Association and the Civil Service Federation, whose 72,000 members are enrolled in 15 autonomous departmental organizations.

Outside the unity conference are two other civil service groups—the 7,000-member Professional Institute and the 10,500-member Canadian Postal Employees Association (CLC).

CONTINUE TALKS

The merger talks are to continue with a special team working out the full draft constitution of the new organization plus a tentative budge and financial needs.

The committee will also start framing a merger agreement required as a prelude to the proposed unification.

A statement issued by the presidents' conference on unity —the formal body working on the merger plan—said the proposals accepted so far in principle are to be referred to the membership of the individual associations for study and formal approval.

The conference agreed to meet again within the next eight to 12 months.

The merger talks followed agreement last week by the two civil service groups and the Professional Institute to set up a joint body for handling collective bargaining with the government.

Eaton Praises Soviet Union And Khrushchev

MOSCOW (AP)—Cyrus Eaton, multi-millionaire U.S. industrialist, has told Soviet television audiences he thinks the Soviet Union is a "marvelous country."

He also said he considers Premier Khrushchev "one of the great statesmen of the world."

The 80 - year - old Pugwash, N.S., native, who had lunch with Khrushchev in the Kremlin, told a panel of television interviewers:

"I am in the unusual position of a capitalist in love with a Communist country. And therefore it is difficult for me to be objective. But an old American saying says: 'Nothing succeeds like success.' Everything (in the Soviet Union) I have seen this air of success and progress."

Eaton arrived last Friday on his latest trip to the Soviet Union.

Eaton urged that U.S. embargoes on the sale of strategic goods to the communist bloc be lifted. He said Britain is taking positive steps to boost its trade with the Soviet Union and "it won't be long before Uncle Sam also gets on the band wagon."

ELLEN'S DIARY

Slim Crescent Of Moon Promises Silvered Nights

A good week this has been at Alderlea. Pleasant, though naturally not with out its concerns, for there is no life or living anywhere, which has not a share of these. However, each day, we were happy to go to our customery round of work. We moved amid pictured surroundings.

Mornings were frost - gemmed: twigs feathered with its pretty the days were, whether in sun or shadow, and dimly engazing the nights...

This evenig a little new moon rolled toward the west — a slim crescent of brightness showing there above a hilltop in promise of silvered nights ahead — a gleaming span to the springtime to come.

We can fancy so easily, now that we think winter's bleakest days lie behind, the tinkle of the brooklets, feel the velvet of first - blown pussy willows smooth against a cheek; see the ewes and lambkins sun in a near meadow, and hear the fowls on happy outings again.

This week gave out farmers busy days. With youngsters arriving in stable and fold, the chroing increases. And farmers like interests to theirs came by at times, to visit with them and make a "tour" of the barns. And all the while, to talk shop. There is, of course, a deep satisfaction in this affinity — in this fellowship in the occupation ours are pleased to follow, which accents, through to no great degree as such farming can, the raising of livestock.

Alex alone of the children in the house across the lane, so fat, shows only a casual interest in the same. Mack, however never finds any work in connection with this husbandry, a task. He shares happily in tending them, and is always kind. His one sister too, enjoys that which is a part of her 4-H work in the Beef Club, and can also see in this machine age, a rare loveliness in the lines and spirit of a horse. Even Peter can become lost in admiration of a calf, who "has a nice back to him."

Gordie, Jamie's 2-past, July-born son, a visitor today, was obviously well pleased to see the lambkins. He smiled happily at sight of them. Dark eyes sparkled. He talked of them, and cuddled one against his cheek.

And the winter days come and go — never two breaking alike, never two in our living same. Each brings to us its measure of happiness and as well its measure of care. For, we remember,

"God hath not promised we shall not know,
Toil and temptation, trouble and woe;
He hath not told us we shall not bear
Many a burden, many a care."

Withal, looking back tonight, reckoning the week's lights and shadows, we can agree with an anonymous writer who declares:

"Life owes me nothing;
One clear morn, is boon enough for being born;
And be it ninety years or ten
No need for me to question when.
When life is mine, I'll find it good.
And greet each hour with gratitude."

Until Monday — Diary — Good-night.....
