Brazilian Red Overthrow Seen Victory For Press

By FRANK BRUTTO

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — One of the unheralded aspects of the revolt that unseated Joao Goulart and his left - leaning government was the victory of Brazil's independent newspapers in a battle for freedom of the press.

The long, bitter fight between the Goulart government and a notable section of the country's press came into sharp focus after a March 13 rally at which Goulart and his adherents assailed Brazil's constitution and Congress.

Ranged beside Goulart were his brother-in-law, Leonel Brizola, and Miguel Arraes, the leftist governor of Pernambuco state, now under arrest.

The opposition press reacted quickly.

Rio's independent O Jornal labelled the rally and speeches an attack on Congress and the constitution, and called it a clear revelation that Goulart intended to try to stay in power beyond his presidential term.

Other newspapers called Goulart's words and acts demagogic gestures.

Brizola announced "something will have to be done to democratize the press."

Just 11 days ago at Santo Domingo, the Inter - American Press Association convention heard a committee report that Goulart planned to establish a monopoly for import and distribution of newsprint.

There were a good many newspapers on the firing line, making retaliation from the Goulart government.

At Porto Alegre, the newspaper Correio do Povo had been the special target of Brizola, governor of the state of Rio Grande do Sul before he became a federal deputy in Guanabara state. The newspaper won a suit against him.

Prominent in the fight was Sao Paulo's noted O Estrado de Sao Paulo whose publisher, Julio Mesquita Filho, spoke so bluntly against Goulart at an overseas Press Club meeting in New York that some of his colleagues—who thought as he did —feared he might suffer reprisal.

In Rio, Jornal Do Brasil, Correio da Manha, O Globo, O Journal, the Assis Chateaubriand chain and others spoke firmly and suffered consequences while the revolt was in progress.

Soldiers invaded quarters of O Globo and Journal do Brasil and their radio broadcasts were forced off the air temporarily.

After the revolution was won, the responsible press was quick to act as a tempering influence and to remind the country that its problems are still to be solved.

New Device Will Neutralize Magnetic Field Of Aircraft

MONTREAL (CP)—A device to neutralize the magnetic field of an airplane, caused by its radio and electrical systems, may soon make the lives of Canada's anti - submarine aircraft pilots easier.

The electronic device is also designed to save money for the navy and air force, as well as improving the accuracy of geological surveys.

Called an automatic permanent magnetic compensator, the device was designed by Andre Brunel and developed by Kees Vandersluis of Canadian Aviation Electronic Limited in Montreal.

Canada's anti-submarine aircraft rely to a large extent on magnetometers to detect the magnetic field thrown off by a submarine's electrical systems.

However, their accuracy is impaired by the magnetic fields which build up around the aircraft themselves.

About every four months, the tracking aircraft must go through complicated demagnetizing procedures which, among other draw-backs, make the flying crews airsick.

ROLLS AND PITCHES

The anti - sub aircraft normally operate as close to the sea as possible but have to climb to 10,000 feet for their demagnetizing. Then they go through three or four hours of rolling, pitching and yawing to detect the strength of their magnetic fields and compensate for them.

Eliminating the demagnetizing flights through use of the new compensator would not only prevent airsickness but would save the estimated $500 an-hour cost of the demagnetizing flights, the firm says.

The Montreal firm says it is negotiating an order for fitting Canada's 60 anti-sub aircraft with the device and eventually hopes to fit the Western world's total of 2,000 such planes with the magnetic compensators.

Direct Query To MacArthur Won Canadians Pacific Role

WINNIPEG (CP)—Publisher R. S. Malone writes in The Free Press that a direct request to Gen. Douglas MacArthur, bypassing the Pentagon, resulted in his acceptance of Canadian forces in the Pacific.

As the war in Europe drew to a close, he writes, both British and Canadian governments felt Canadian forces should participate in the final assault on Japan so the Commonwealth would have a stronger voice in the peace settlement.

Accordingly Brig. Malone, who had been personal liaison officer to Field Marshal Montgomery in Italy, was notified to proceed to the Philippines as head of a small advance party.

"An immediate difficulty arose in that Gen. MacArthur ignored or rejected all requests put to him by the Pentagon for a Canadian mission to join his headquarters. It was assumed both in Washington and Ottawa that MacArthur was opposed to any Canadian forces in his command . . .

"At this impasse the idea came to me that if like Field Marshal Montgomery and many other great field commanders, MacArthur was a man of pride, independence and also with a high degree of vanity and self - confidence, the problem might simply be that he resented this request coming from the Pentagon in Washington.

"With this possibility in mind and with the prior approval of Washington, I arranged for our request to bypass the Pentagon and go direct to MacArthur from Prime Minister Mackenzie King. We banked on the effect of MacArthur being dealt with directly by the head of state.

"My strategy worked and I was invited by MacArthur to proceed immediately with my mission to his headquarters. On our arrival in Okinawa and the Philippines, Gen. MacArthur could not have been more helpful and well disposed to our Canadian plans."

Brig. Malone also writes he was surprised to read some years after the war, in an article on previously unpublished views of the late Gen. George C. Marshall, an indication that MacArthur had been consulted in advance about the use of the atomic bomb.

He wrote to MacArthur in 1958 to clear up the mystery and MacArthur replied:

"I knew nothing of the atom bomb until shortly before it was dropped when Gen. Spaatz informed me in very general terms of what was taking place. I knew nothing of the time or place of its dropping and was not consulted in the matter."

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	2 ♥	Pass	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	3 ♥	Pass
3 NT	Pass	Pass	Dble

Opening lead — queen of hearts.

The best players play well, but they don't always achieve the degree of perfection which would be possible if they could see all 52 cards. A player's skill is judged by what he can accomplish during the bidding from seeing his own 13 cards and listening to what the other players at the table bid, as well as by what he can accomplish during the play from seeing only dummy's cards and his own.

For example, take this hand played in the finals of the Spingold in 1961. South was Norman Kay playing with his regular partner, the late and great Sidney Silodor. They arrived at three notrump doubled on the bidding shown.

Silodor had no convenient bid to make over the preemptive overcall of two hearts, and passed. But when Kay showed a good hand by bidding three clubs, Silodor invited game in notrump by showing his heart control. Kay accepted the invitation and bid three notrump, which East doubled.

West led a heart and Kay easily made nine tricks. He could have made two overtricks by guessing the diamond finesse correctly, but he settled quite properly for nine tricks.

Of course, if West had been sufficiently inspired to lead the king and another spade, the contract would have been defeated. This lead would have been much easier to make if West had seen everyone's cards.

Similarly, if Kay-Silodor had seen all the hands, they would have contributed five clubs, which could not be defeated.

On a more rational basis, the result might have been entirely different if East had seen fit to bid three hearts over two hearts, or possibly two spades instead. In either case it is likely that North - South would not have reached a game.

One of the fascinations of bridge is that you can't expect to achieve the best result possible in every deal, but there's a lot of fun in trying to do it.

Yesterday's Answer

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
