SENSATION AMONG WASHINGTON DIPLOMATS OVER NOTES ISSUED BY U. S.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—Publication by the State Department tonight of the text of the notes sent yesterday to Great Britain and Germany respectively, revealed that both countries had been warned in most emphatic terms against menacing the vessels or lives of American citizens travelling the recently proclaimed sea zones of war. Germany was advised that the United States would be constrained to hold the Imperial German Government to a strict accountability for such acts of its naval authorities as might result in the destruction of American vessels or the loss of American lives and that if "such a deplorable situation should arise," the American Government would take any steps it might be necessary to take to safeguard American lives and property.

TALES TOLD BY MEN IN THE FIGHTING LINES ON LAND AND ON SEA

A wounded soldier in a London hospital writes: Every Sunday evening there is a service in the hospital chapel, attendance at which is quite optional. Last Sunday a sister approached a group of men kept up returned from the trenches and asked them if they were going to the service. One or two said they were. As soon as the sister had left them, they began to argue among themselves as to the use of it all. Upon the whole of them, a veteran of the whole of the Boer war, said, "If you didn't pray while you were in the trenches I did, and if it was good enough there it is surely good enough here." The others owned that they had prayed. The best part of them attended the service.

HOW LIEUT. TURNER FELL. The story of how Lieutenant F. H. Turner, of the Liverpool Scottish, and famous in the rugby world as a foremost international player, met his death in the trenches is related by a fellow officer in a letter home. After Turner went down to the trench to look at some barbed wire he had put out in front the night before. On the way he twice looked up for a second, and each time he was shot at, but both shots missed. He then got to a place where the parapet was rather low, and was talking to a sergeant when a bullet went between their heads. Lieutenant Turner said: "By Jove, that has deafened my right ear!" and the sergeant said, "And my left one, too, sir." He then went to shade lower and had a look at the wire, and was shot clean through the middle of the forehead, the bullet coming out the back of the head, killing him instantly. The same man had evidently been following him all the way down the trench. The lieutenant ought not to have looked up for a bit, as a man walking along a trench can be seen by the enemy every time he passes a loop hole.

DESTROYER AND SUBMARINE. A seaman serving in a British destroyer writes. You ask me to give you a little insight into what we are doing. Our job is patrolling up and down the East Coast. It was the first of November that we got our first experience with German submarines. It was an ideal night for an attack by these craft—dark, and the water a bit choppy. No man is allowed to turn in the hammock on such a night. At about half past two in the middle watch the starboard sighter reported a light on the horizon; another was soon seen ahead; and shortly afterwards another was reported on the port side. We steamed up within twenty yards of the first light and then the rays of our searchlight on the submarine and immediately it disappeared. The other two lights disappeared at the same instant. As a matter of fact the submarine had mistaken our ship for their own supply ship, the red lights evidently being their recognition signals. The captain put on full speed and steered about in a semi-circle in the hope of ramming one of the submarines, but without success. Every minute we expected to get a "fin fish" into the sight of our ship, but fortunately they failed to torpedo us. Word was signalled to the other destroyers in our division and a careful watch was kept up until dawn; but nothing more was seen of the enemy."

THE COLONEL'S LEAD. Captain Rich, Governor of Northampton Gaol, who has rejoined the Lincolnshire regiment and is now at the front, writing home says: My regiment have had their share of hard work, and have done magnificent service, and I am proud to be at the front. They have suffered, as any regiment is bound to, who have been through what they have had to face. They captured a whole battery of German guns, and killed every man in it. They have been faced by fearful odds and stood like rocks. The greater part of the credit for this is due to the commanding officer. If ever a man ought to have a Victoria Cross, with two or three bars on it, he ought. He is always in the thick of the fighting, and always ready to help any one in difficulty. Wounded three times—fortunately, only slightly—he is here still full of life and spirit, ever cheerful, and continually in the bring line trenches, encouraging officers and men with such a lead. We all know, of course, that his services will be recognized, but no honor is too great for him; and there is not one of the round dozen men in the regiment who have already earned the distinguished conduct medal who would not pin it on their colonel tomorrow. One night the regiment was ordered out in a hurry where help was required. A certain general, riding by, and in the dark, said, "What regiment is this?" Someone answered, "The Lincolnshire, sir." "Oh, we are all right, then," replied the general. We are fighting an enemy who will stop at nothing to gain his end. Personally, I have no patience with singing hymns and playing football with an enemy such as we are fighting. There may be thousands and millions of people in Germany just as honorable as anyone else, but we are fighting a nation, and as a nation, they

HEWSON BLOCK IN AMHERST DESTROYED

The stocks were partially covered by insurance.

HCW GERMAN MURDER REFUGES.

PARIS, Feb. 11.—The French Government yesterday made public the results of the inquiry ordered by the Minister of Marine, into the torpedoing of the French merchantman Admiral Guanteau on October 29th, 1914, and gave to representatives in Paris of the neutral powers copies of the memorandum. The vessel, when struck by a torpedo fired by a German submarine had on board 2,600 refugees from Belgian and French coast towns. The report says the attack was committed by a German submarine without warning or stopping. It asserts that the attack was made on an undefended merchantman carrying women and children and old men who were refugees. The attack it is contended, was without military or naval utility and was only the murder of inoffensive individuals. The report scores the methods of German submarines and says the majority of the public believes it is acting in the common interests of the civilized world in bringing these facts to the attention of the other Governments.

HOW KITCHENER SPENDS HIS DAY

(Toronto Saturday Night.) Always an early riser, Lord Kitchener finds it an easy thing now to be out of bed at 6 a.m. and take the only physical exercise he can get in the early part of the day. He gets up and rides before breakfast, which he has at 7.30.

His morning meal is always the same. Fried sole, fruit and cream, and a couple of pieces of toast and a cup of coffee. After breakfast, the silent man, upon whose shoulders rests the greatest responsibility that ever any man in the world's history has borne, glances over his private letters, gives a secretary some instructions, and an hour later departs to the War Office, in Whitehall, where he arrives at 9 a.m. sharp.

It is a common error to suppose that Lord Kitchener inspires his immediate subordinates with a terror that keeps them continually in dread lest they may incur by some trivial act the anger of the "chief." As a matter of fact, Lord Kitchener is probably one of the most generous and kindliest of men. He has about him a staff that are personally devoted to him. One whose work brings him into immediate contact with Lord Kitchener knows that the "chief" never allows to recognize special ability, never blames a man who does his best, and never a reproach that is undeserved. Lord Kitchener is the least fussy of men.

Men who have been summoned to his presence and who did not know the "chief" have entered the large spacious apartment of the secretary of war, occupied in fear and trembling, lest they should not have the facts about which they were to be questioned at their fingers' ends, and so incur the anger of the man whose time is so fully occupied. But a few minutes in Lord Kitchener's presence puts them at ease. One man who lately had an interview with the secretary of war informed the writer that Lord Kitchener's greeting and pleasant manner put him so completely at his ease in a few minutes that he had no difficulty at all in answering the questions put to him. Then came a pleasant nod and the interview was over. It lasted almost six minutes.

Lord Kitchener lunches usually at 1 o'clock at the war office. His lunch is quite a light meal, often consisting of a few brown bread and cucumber sandwiches and a cup of coffee. On specially busy days the secretary of war ignores lunch altogether, and more than once has worked from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. without a pause. At 5 o'clock Lord Kitchener, if possible, takes half an hour's rest from his labors, when a cup of tea and biscuits are served up to him in his personal room. Sometimes he may be joined by some members of the Government or of the war office staff, but it is understood that during tea no serious aspect and questions relating to the war will be discussed. If circumstances permit, Lord Kitchener dines at 8 o'clock at his club, but his dinner is a movable feast, and may be hastily snatched in the war office at 9 o'clock, or possibly at 7, or

ROYAL YEAST IS BEST YEAST IN THE WORLD

Interviews with the king, attendances at Cabinet meetings, attendances in the House of Lords when Parliament is sitting, these are among the engagements that Lord Kitchener has expressed with his monumental labors at the war office, to say nothing of inspecting military centres and troops. And always it is the strong, immensely capable, clear-minded man, never tired, never fussy, that is there to perform the most responsible duties it is possible to conceive.

Lord Kitchener frequently, of course, sleeps at the war office. When he first came to take up his duties there, he asked was there a bedroom in the office. "None," he was informed. "Get one ready, please, tonight," was the order.

There is, of course, a big telegraphic room at the war office, and on the outbreak of war Lord Kitchener found that an increased staff of operators would be required. He sent a message to the post office central telegraph office to send thirty extra operators. The reply he received was a politely expressed regret that they could not be sent.

Then came a second message from the secretary of war to say that he would not trouble the post office authorities to send them. "I shall send an escort for them," he said, "and take them!" And he got the operators in an hour.

It is a curious fact that the stories which one usually hears in connection with this great soldier are told of the slacker and the coward. Indeed, one might almost imagine that he passes his whole time in frightening people. As a matter of fact, Lord Kitchener is one of the most considerate of officers to men under him—who do their work.

During the South African war a man rode to ride many miles with a dog, which he was to deliver into Lord Kitchener's hands. He found him, and the terrifying person of his

Aching Back Gets Relief Quick! One Rub With "Nerviline" Cures

EVERY BIT OF STIFFNESS AND SORENESS GOES WHEN "NERVILINE" IS USED

Pain in back or side is awful hard to reach. Deep in the tissue is a congested or strained muscle. It is a long way for a liniment to go. Liniments you have used have not reached it, and the pain bothers you, whether moving or lying down.

What a pity you haven't tried Nerviline! Penetrating, you ask? Yes, and powerful, too. Nerviline strikes in far deeper than any application you have ever used. You might pay a dollar, ten dollars, a hundred, for that matter, but you could not get Nerviline, either in strength, quickness of action, or permanency of relief.

If you think this too much to say for Nerviline, try it, and be convinced. A little less relief from Nerviline even a little less relief from pain than this advertisement induces you to expect, you can get your money back.

The only pain remedy in the world sold under a guarantee is Nerviline—surely it is safe to try it.

Nerviline is sold by druggists everywhere, 25 cents or 50 cents a bottle or direct from The Catarthozoo Co., Kingston, Canada.
