Night Spot Goes More Casual

LONDON (CP—The Cafe de Paris, one of London's best-known society night spots, is closing shortly for "alterations."

When it reopens, perhaps next January, the cellar haunt of show business personalities and royalty will have a new look. Meals will be cheaper, evening dress will no longer be compulsory and expensive big names will be missing from the ranks of the entertainers.

The change is part of a trend toward more informal late-night entertainment.

The pink-decorated rendezvous in Leicester Square, patronized before the Second World War by the Duke of Windsor, has specialized recently in star names such as Marlene Dietrich, Liberace, Noel Coward and Tallulah Bankhead. Customers have included members of the Princess Margaret set.

In 1941, the Cafe de Paris was hit by a bomb and 84 persons were killed.
