MR. AND MRS. ERNEST CAMERON

Bride's Bouquet Features Mums, Roses And Heather

The marriage of Miriam Ruth, daughter of Mrs. Alexander A. MacDonald and the late Mr. MacDonald, and Ernest Calvin, Head of Hillsborough son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Cameron took place November 4th in Zion Presbyterian Church with Rev. Donald A. Campbell officiating. The music was under the direction of the church organist, Mrs. Harvey MacKinnon.

Given in marriage by her brother, Harold, the bride entered the church to The Trumpet Voluntary in D Major.

The bride's dress was Acadian blue brocaded satin fashioned in sheath style with fitted jacket. Her hat, made of the same material, was a hand fashioned stirred semi-pillbox with matching veiling. She carried a Colonial bouquet of snowdrift mums, pink sweetheart roses and a sprig of heather and wore a single strand of pearls, a gift of the groom.

The matron of honor was the bride's sister, Mrs. Eric Holloway of Pictou, N.S. She wore a beige brocaded dress fashioned on the same style as the bride's. Her headdress was a large velvet bow with whimsy veil. She carried a Colonial bouquet of bronze mums.

Best man was Willard Coffin, a cousin of the groom.

Ushers were the bride's brother Earl MacDonald and the groom's nephew, Dr. Wayne Cameron.

During the signing of the register, Mr. Frank Wood sang "The Lord's Prayer".

Following the wedding, the reception was held in the Coles Memorial Hall of Zion Church. The guest book was circulated by Louise MacDonald, the bride's niece.

For her going away costume the bride wore a peacock blue double knit sheath with matching jacket, black velvet cloche and black accessories. Her corsage was of white roses.

The bride and groom will reside at Head of Hillsboro.

ASSURES ON A-BOMB

RAWALPINDI (AP) — Yvon Dupuis, Canadian minister without portfolio, said Saturday Indian Foreign Minister Sardar Swaran Singh assured him in New Delhi that "India will not produce atomic weapons" with the help of a reactor supplied by Canada. However, Dupuis said it was Singh's personal view. At the time of Singh's assurance the Indian cabinet had not discussed the Chinese nuclear explosion.

ELLEN'S DIARY

A Brown-Eyed Visitor Steals Alderlea Hearts

In an exciting happening, one eagerly accepted by the folks at Alderlea, a babe came yesterday morning to spend a few days here, to visit between this and the house across the lane. This is Jamie's and Elva's younger daughter, the eight months old Cathy Ann. An active healthy child, and mostly happy, she is considered by the family to be "a dear." Obviously a little lost when set down amid new, though not altogether strange surroundings, when her parents, and the one girl of this place, were about to catch an early boat to the Mainland, she was soon offering her sweetest smiles to Alex and Peter, who entertained her royally.

"Now what shall we get for her to play with?" Alex wondered at the outset.

"My little gun" Peter suggested.

"Silly! Girls don't play with guns! I know: run home and get that doll. She will like that."

Peter, a mannish fellow in his almost four years, gave up his cot to her so that her sleeping — and waking would be safe. She creeps, when eagerly accepted by the folks given the opportunity, and when left in her playpen, a favorite pastime is to grip a pair of rungs and draw herself upright, the feat accomplished with a satisfied smile. Brown-eyed, fair of skin, hair a sunny shade of brown, she like all babies, has a way of ingratiating herself unwittingly into folks' hearts. It is so true that "babes bring their love with them" into the arms and homes to which they come.

"A - hem!" Papa Starling cleared his throat loudly this morning to attract our attention, when we commenced to spread the wash. "This does it!" he called through a windy gust. Leaves that had been grounded, whirled by, tormented things, that could never find peace until the wind should withdraw over the fields.

"Oh?"

"Yes" he said coming nearer, and cupping his lips. "We've settled it We'll go on this wind."

"At once?" we queried.

"Yes. That is" he amended "when the Missus decides what she'll wear: her suit or... oh dear" he shook his head, "what other outfit did she say?" We chuckled. "That's the worst of having two — it causes the moments of indecision!"

"No good - byes" he said.

"No good - byes" we smiled.

"Just: be good to James, and" he grinned, "may the Mondays continue to see your wash spread"

"Now isn't that nice of you" we said.

"Ellen" James hailed us from the barnyard. "I think I'll go now and give the boys a hand with those turnips. They have quite a patch of them still to do. It's windy, that's for sure. But it's dry, drier than I reckon it will be... Now watch out for the fires, in this wind! Better keep the dampers closed. Remember there can be no picking up after a fire!"

Night now. And calm. And day done. And all continues well with us here.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good - night.....

MARY HAWORTH

Cardiac Patient's Wife Needs Psychiatric Help

Dear Mary Haworth: After reading NK's forlorn plaint, of being vaguely at odds with her husband since he's had two heart attacks, I can't resist adding my comments.

I endorse wholeheartedly your advice, that she consult a psychiatrically oriented doctor for guidance in adjusting to her husband's present semi-invalid state of mind.

You hit the nail on the head, I think in construing that she feels sexually unwanted, rejected, insecure, unattractive, etc., in the wife-role nowadays.

Eighteen months ago, when my husband was 45 and I, 25, he was hospitalized with a heart attack, just shortly before our second child was born. After a month in the hospital and six weeks at home, he returned to work part-time. Later he was able to work full-time.

I was naive enough to think that given a few months' rest, he would be back to normal again, and so would our marriage. I hadn't foreseen the tremendous psychological toll. Even after he had the doctor's permission to resume marital relations he shrank from the risk.

Also, he developed tachycardia (rapid irregular heartbeat) for which he was hospitalized five times, for periods ranging from three to 14 days. His anxiety was such that, except for work and occasional short walks, he wouldn't leave the house.

A fog of misunderstanding grew between us and I didn't know how to help it. Outsiders marveled at how well I was doing, but inwardly I was engulfed in self-pity, though in fairness to myself I must say I was doing my best to encourage Jim's belief that he was mending steadily, despite setbacks.

I felt isolated, both from Jim and the rest of the world. I found a new hardness in myself, as if the strain had sapped all my capacity for love, tenderness, empathy; as if I had decided simply to grit my teeth and bear it. At times I wept miserably; other times I just mentally shrugged.

Then two months ago, when Jim was gaining in vigor and confidence he suffered a mild tachycardia attack and went into a coma, from which he never wakened. My remorse was terrible in the weeks that followed, as I thought of all I might have done (the tenderness I might have shown) to make him happier.

Every day I pray God to forgive my omissions, as I hope in time to be able to forgive myself. If only I had consulted someone at the beginning of Jim's illness, it might have made all the difference to both of us.

That's why I urge NK to act on your sound advice while she still has time to profit by it. Sincerely, TM.

Dear T.M.: Two proverbs come to mind as one scans your painful recollections, concerning the pattern and costs of your "hurt" behavior during the course of your husband's prolonged emotional invalidism.

The first of these proverbs is, "To understand all is to forgive all." And "all," in your case, means forgiving not only your self-centered failure to love perfectly, in the testing time; but also the failure of your much-older husband to comprehend the psycho-sexual nature of the entrancement and explain, judiciously, that it wasn't wilfully promoted by either of you, but was, rather, a mutual cross.

Very likely there was more to his emotional invalidism, following his heart attack, than simply anxiety about his health.

Whether he was an erstwhile frightened bachelor who married comparatively late, or a man who'd been married before, and left another family for you, one senses that he was plagued with deep misgivings about the totality of his life situation, once the illness took hold. And those misgivings may have fanned the panic reactions that changed him into a withdrawn man. Psychiatric counsel might have helped him as well as you.

The second proverb is "Honest confession is good for the soul." I think that you, as well as NK, stand to profit by your courage and candor in getting your remorse off your chest.

As of now, it is not too late to go into the story with a good psycho-analyst, so as to shore up your own psychological health —for the years ahead (and for the children's sake) M.H.

Golden Decor Is Used For Anniversary Party

Mr. and Mrs. James L. LePage (nee Lucy MacKenzie) were at home at Hunter River to friends on Wednesday, October 21 on the occassion of their golden wedding anniversary.

Mrs. J.R. Murchison received the callers and circulated the guest book.

The dining room table was set with a lace tablecloth. A three tier anniversary cake decorated with golden roses and flanked by golden tapers centered the table.

Tea was poured by Mrs. Lloyd Wonnacott, Mrs. Elias Bishop and Mrs. Stewart Parkman. Those serving were: Mrs. A. B. Lepage, Mrs. Jay Edwards, Mrs. Wilfred Cudmore and Mrs. Harry Bishop. Mrs. Stephen Huestis replenished.

Floral gifts were received from Mr. and Mrs. Walter Maynard of Concord, Mass. who were in attendance and from Rev. W. A. and Mrs. Patterson, the Buntain Family, and the Knox family.

Gifts were presented by members of United Church choir, United Church Women, the Women's Institute, the student body of the Regional High School and teachers of Regional High School.

FUTURE PREDICTION

LONDON (CP) — Christopher Cockerall, inventor of Britain's hovercraft, said in an address to the Engineering Industries Association that the hovercraft of the future may run on tracks at speeds of 300 miles an hour. WI Requests Amendment To Criminal Code

TORONTO (CP)—A resolution asking abortions be made legal was passed Thursday at a convention of the central Ontario area women's institutes.

Addressed to the federal ministers of health and justice, it requests:

"That the Criminal Code of Canada be amended to legalize abortion on grounds which would include criminal assaults and the health, both physical and mental, of the mother, and when carried out by a recognized medical practitioner under the authority of a medical committee, duly constituted and when carried out in a duly accredited place."

The nearly 400 delegates passed the resolution without discussion except for a comment from the floor that "we know this has to come."

It was introduced by Mrs. Alexander Munro of Scarborough. She told the delegates more than 75 per cent of criminal abortions are performed on married women and that more than 1,000,000 are performed in the U.S. and Canada every year.

She said abortion is dangerous mostly because it has been forced underground.

"The existing law is archaic and futile because it does not prevent abortions from being performed, but only makes the operation dangerous, makes criminals out of the innocent and provides a lucrative sideline for the guilty."
