Impending Conference Shapes As Major Testing For Pearson

By DON HANRIGHT

OTTAWA (CP)—The impending federal - provincial conference is shaping up as a crucial test of the Pearson government's ability to reconcile its two major objectives in fiscal relations.

Both have been declared publicly since the Liberals took office seven months ago. They are these:

1. The federal government is ready to get out of such programs as hospital insurance and disability pensions if the provinces continue in these fields, which constitutionally are theirs.

Ottawa now pays about half the costs of these plans. To compensate the provinces for the loss of the federal share, Ottawa would withdraw far enough from the income-tax field so the provinces could step in and levy their own taxes to raise an equivalent amount of money.

2. Ottawa must retain its ability to influence economic activity in Canada, which it does through tax policy, and by managing its own debt and the money supply in concert with the Bank of Canada.

Taxation power is one of the biggest weapons in this economic arsenal. If taxing authority is diminished by giving more of it to the provinces, Ottawa's capacity for not only influencing the economy, but equalizing the financial positions of the provinces, could be seriously weakened.

Thus it is a dilemma of three parts — the constitution, the economy and partly politics.

Prime Minister Pearson referred to the situation this week in the Commons when he said in part:

"I believe not only that the rights and privileges of the provinces inside Confederation are a basic essential for co-operative federalism; I also believe that the federal government must have enough authority to do the job entrusted to it by he people of Canada.

"Surely these two things can and must be reconciled."

The provinces already have the right to levy their own personal and corporation income taxes and death duties. They get part-way into these fields—which, again, are theirs constitutionally—when the old tax-rental system was scrapped in 1961.

Last year, Ottawa abated its personal income tax rates by 16 per cent, leaving the provinces free to enter the field with their own rates designed to pick up that slack or more. The federal abatement this year is 17 per cent. Under the current agreement, it rises one point a year to 20 per cent in 1966.

In addition, the federal government has abated nine percentage points of its rate of tax on corporation income—which works out so the provinces get between 21 and 22 percent of the total tax "take" from corporations. And the provinces also have 50 per cent of the field of death taxes.

Then came last April's ultimatum from Premier Lesage of Quebec. He wants 25 per cent of both the income tax fields, plus all the succession - duty field. And he also wants an end to the joint programs, which would mean even further federal withdrawal from these fields of so-called "direct taxation."

REPLIES TO LESAGE

First reply to Mr. Lesage came two months later in the June 13 federal budget, in which Finance Minister Gordon said:

"The federal government has a special responsibility of ensuring adequate production and employment throughout the country. Fiscal policy is an important means of achieving this objective.

"Most people will agree, I am sure, that if the federal government were to give up a major part of its present revenue sources, even in exchange for compensating expenditure adjustments, its ability to exert an influence through fiscal policy over the level of economic activity in Canada would be weakened."

Alvin Hamilton, former Conservative agriculture minister, said this week that withdrawal from the joint plans would be "a retreat from the concept of federalism that I know." It would see Canada revert to "a league of independent states."

Said New Democratic Leader T. C. Douglas, former Saskatchewan premier:

". . . While we want to do everything we can to enable the provinces to have sufficient financial resources of their own in order that they may discharge their responsibilities, and while we want to have a minimum of interference in provincial jurisdiction, I suggest to those who talk about provincial rights that they must give equal consideration to leaving the federal government the power to discharge its responsibilities."

Chaput's Party Short Of Funds

MONTREAL (CP)—La Presse says the secretariat of Marcel Chaput's Quebec Republican party soon will be closed due to the party's shortage of funds.

The newspaper says a half-dozen salaried employees in the party's office in the east-end of Montreal would be affected.

Dr. Chaput, who founded the party a year ago, declined to confirm or deny the report.

Financial difficulties are not new to Dr. Chaput. He staged a 33-day hunger strike last summer to raise $100,000 to finance operations of the Republican party. He has since said that the money was practically all used to pay off debts which had accumulated up to the time he started his fast.

Recently he set off a number of resignations from the party by announcing plans to float a bond issue which would repay investors as much as 25 times their original contribution within a year after Quebec had attained independence.

BANKERS SAID TOP DRESSERS

LONDON (AP) — Bankers still are Britain's best-dressed men, the clothing industry has voted. Politicians were demoted but still ranked a couple of notches above farmers and journalists.

The 1963 ratings of the Clothing Manufacturers' Federation placed actors second and lawyers third. Master builders jumped into fourth place from 10th. The politicians fell from third to fifth place.

"Of course there are honorable exceptions but regrettably many of the more eminent politicians appeared in public dressed in a way that made us wonder whether we were not looking at a group of absent-minded professors," the federation said.

After the politicians, the survey listed accountants, doctors and dentists, farmers, journalists and TV newscasters, architects, hotelier and saloonkeepers, and in the 12th slot, civil servants.

M-F Reports Record Sales

WINNIPEG (CP) — Massey-Ferguson reports record net sales of $232,000,000 for the 1963 fiscal year in Canada and the United States.

D. A. Coape-Arnold of Toronto, general manager of the implement firm's North American operations, told a press conference the total was up 10 per cent from 1962.

The company's 1963 fiscal year ended Oct. 31. Sales of farm and light industrial equipment for the previous year totalled $210,000,000.

The 1962 sales figure has been adjusted to make it comparable with new U.S.-Canada dollar exchange rates.

The firm's Canadian net sales for 1963 is expected to hit $71,000,000, another record and 21 per cent higher than the 1962 figure of about $58,000,000.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North

Pass	4♥	5♣	Dble.
Pass	5♥	Pass	Pass
Dble.

Opening lead — king of clubs.

This hand was played in Buenos Aires during the match between France and the United States in 1961.

Trezel, for France, opened with four clubs, which North (Kay) doubled after two passes. South (Silodor) responded with four hearts, over which West (Le Dentu) bid five clubs.

Kay doubled again, but Silodor refused to stand for the double and bid five hearts. (This was a wise move on his part, since five clubs could not be defeated.) Le Dentu doubled five hearts and led the king of clubs.

Silodor discarded a spade on the ace of clubs and played the king of hearts. West took the ace and returned a spade, which East ruffed, and the outcome was that South went down one — 200 points. Had West been sufficiently inspired to lead a spade originally, the contract would have gone down two.

When Bacherich and Ghestem held the North - South cards for France, the bidding went:

It is hard to understand why Bacherich ran from six hearts to six spades, but obviously he did not realize he was jumping from the frying pan into the fire. It is possible that within the Bacherich - Ghestem framework of bidding, Ghestem lacked the values for a double of four clubs, but whatever the reason for the final contract, the world-famous pair were caught way off base.

East (Schenken, playing with Leventritt) led the queen of clubs. Declarer ruffed in dummy, cashed the ace of spades, and played a heart. West took the ace and returned the king of clubs, ruffed in dummy.

When declarer then led a heart, West ruffed and returned a diamond to the ace. East played another heart, which West ruffed, and the outcome was that North went down three—800 points.
