AHYO! ABOARD THE MOTOR BOATS

One of the correspondents of "Motor Boating" recently had the following to say, than which I think nothing could be printed in this column of more value to the class of people who are interested in, and own, motorboats:

"The following incidents are typical: A lead pipe, leading from the gasoline tank to the motor became loose, and in a few minutes the gasoline supply was beautifully mixed with the bilge water in the bottom of the boat. We were ten miles from home, and it was almost dark. The water was rough, and the constant motion of the boat prevented the gasoline from assuming its natural position on top of the bilge water, so we dipped up a liberal supply of the mixture and requested one of the ladies to hold it steadily poised while I skimmed off a portion of the gasoline. Emptying the lubricating oil out of the lubricating can I filled it with the gasoline, and bending the broken end of the feed pipe upward I inserted the point of the spout into it. Of course we had to re-fill the oil can several times before we reached home but we did not lose much time."

"It was raining and the motor stopped. I soon found that the cause of its refusal to work was 'no spark' in the spark plug. But why? The dry cells were fresh, and each one tested up well with the ammeter. After going through the complete list of what I considered probable causes I casually noticed that the pasteboard covers of the dry cells were all wet. Removing them I wrapped each cell in dry cloth and protected them from rain. This ended the trouble. The wet paper had practically united all the zinc elements of the five cells into one."

"Out in the middle of the lake, three miles from shore, the boat gradually slowed down, although the motor continued to run. The set-screw which held the propeller to the shaft had worked loose and disappeared in the lake. Fortunately the propeller remained on the shaft. Not a single thing in the boat could be used as a substitute for that recalcitrant set-screw. "Putting on the life preserver I dropped into the water at the stern of the boat, and bidding the others sit in the bow so as to elevate the propeller as much as possible I drove the small blade of my pocket knife between the propeller and its shaft with the monkey wrench until it broke off close to the handle. This served as a key which held the propeller while we travelled the three miles slowly, fearing all the while that our temporary key would let go, but it held solid."

Your Farm Needs Fertilizers--- Needs Our Unmixed Fertilizers

You cannot expect your farm to produce its full amount of profitable crops each year without using a good fertilizer, and a ready mixed fertilizer is not satisfactory, for different crops require different plant foods. Our Unmixed Fertilizers have proven to all practical farmers that they are best. They are endorsed by all government experts and have proven in practical tests that they are the most profitable and productive that nature and science can produce.

They are unmixed and the different elements can be combined to suit the varying requirements of every plot on your farm—easy to apply, cost little, do much, contain no foreign substances sometimes thrown in to increase weight—and besides this, you save fully 25 p. c. by home mixing.

Write today for free booklets on farming and fertilizers—they are yours for the asking.

Fertilizing of Hay and Grain

It is now an undisputed fact among agriculturists that crops of either hay, grain or roots, can not be grown continuously with any measure of success, without the aid of artificial fertilizers. During their growth and maturity all plants utilize certain ingredients in the soil, commonly known as "Plant Foods." The three that enter most largely into the composition of a plant, and are therefore most liable to be most deficient in a soil are NITROGEN, PHOSPHORIC ACID and POTASH. Thus it stands to reason that if the crops grown are depleting the soil of these substances in varying quantities, the farmer must replace them in order to continue raising these crops. In other words he must maintain the fertility of the soil.
