P. M. Tells Labour Congress He Seeks Equal Opportunity

By JOHN LeBLANC
Canadian Press Staff Writer

OTTAWA (CP)—Prime Minister Diefenbaker, receiving the Canadian Labor Congress' annual legislative brief for the first time, Monday made no major specific pledges but promised full consideration to a wide series of representations made by the 1,000,000-member body.

Mr. Diefenbaker made no comment on two CLC demands—royal commissions—one to investigate methods of settling industrial disputes and the other to draft a wholesale revision of immigration laws.

NO COMMENT

Nor did he comment on an interim congress proposal to split the citizenship and immigration department to hand immigration to the labor department and citizenship to the secretary of state. Labour Minister Starr said he hopes current studies on a revision of the Federal Labor Code, which governs industrial relations, will bring improvements.

Mr. Starr also said a meeting will be held to determine whether a permanent advisory committee is necessary to aid enforcement of the federal law barring discrimination on grounds of race, creed or color in employment.

FAST TO PROMISE

In his reply to the brief, Mr. Diefenbaker said he would be the last to promise that his government would carry out all of the many things sought by the congress.

"But we will so chart our course," he added, "that our purpose will be to achieve those things that assure equality of opportunity for all Canadians."

Of the CLC's renewal of parental requests for improved social security measures on scales higher than those now proposed by the new government, Mr. Diefenbaker said "we can't do those things now that have been asked for."

"But we can go forward," he said, "having in mind the demands of the Canadian people for lower taxes, particularly in the lower income groups. We will do what is reasonable and fair."

The prime minister said he agrees with the CLC that there should be a representative of labor on the culture-promoting Canada Council, and he added an other major omission is that it has no representative of agriculture.

"They deserve representation on such a council," he said, though he went no further than this.

ACTION FOR FARMERS

Dealing with a CLC request that the government take measures to boost farm income, he said he was glad to see organized labor taking this attitude towards another segment of the population.

There would be action at the current session of Parliament to help meet the economic difficulties of the farmers, he said.

He told the congress that a trade group which will visit Britain in the next few weeks would have representation from organized labor as well as from agriculture.

The congress brief ranged over a wide variety of national and international affairs, but its major request was for a royal commission on the settling of industrial disputes.

It said conciliation procedure over about 50 years has remained static, and new methods should be tried.

IMMEDIATE STEPS

Meanwhile, immediate measures should be taken to amend the labor code to:

Provide by law the voluntary irrevocable check off of union dues by employers.

Prevent employers "weshing" on labor agreements by farming out part of their work.

In calling for a royal commission on immigration, the congress said the existing immigration act is "thoroughly unsatisfactory."

It "enshrines the vicious principle of racial discrimination" and "gives the administration sweeping and arbitrary powers." It also had been administered in a righ-handed spirit.

Pending a thorough overhaul of the act, the congress said the government should establish an advisory committee on immigration representing labor, farmers management, welfare agencies and other bodies over the prospect of heavy unemployment in Canada late this fall and winter.

It suggested that "judicious relaxation" in monetary policy could create jobs.

While workers did not want inflation that would reduce the real value of money, the CLC said:

"It may be necessary to balance the right of a mild inflation against the virtual certainties of large-scale unemployment."

The congress asked that a national hospital insurance plan be made effective, declaring that it should include all the health care that every Canadian requires. Nothing less would be satisfactory.

Visiting Metallorgists Have Happy Impressions

By FORBES RHUDE
Canadian Press Business Editor

There's a tinge of regret as you pick up the pages of notes you have taken on a month-long tour of Canada, such as the recent tour with the Commonwealth Mining and Metallurgical Congress.

There are the conversations with people that somehow never got time your citizens and the names of people you planned to talk with and never did.

I liked, for instance, the comment of William McBride of Australia, who said of the people of northern Canada:

FRONTIER COURTLINES

"They seem to retain an old-world courtliness which one doesn't see in the bustling cities."

To which Mrs. McBride added:

"There is still in the northern territories a feeling of being on the frontier, and yet they are an integral part of Canada and everywhere there is a sense of the graciousness of living."

Then there were Mr. and Mrs. C. A. O'Donnell, both former Canadians who have lived in Northern Rhodesia for nearly 30 years who, one felt, were looking at their homeland with objective eyes. Mr. O'Donnell said:

"There is an overall impression in Canada of a willingness to take on propositions which might daunt anyone else."

On the lighter side was the puzzlement of a girl elevator operator in a hotel in one of the cities visited. She read on their lapel cards the names of delegates from many countries, and finally said to one from the United Kingdom:

"I know where Australia is and where South Africa is and where most of the other places are, but where in the world is the United Kingdom?"

It made the man from the U.K. sympathize with Alhaji Muhammadu Ribadu, minister of mines for the Federation of Nigeria, who commented:

"When I say I am from Nigeria, people frequently tell me that they, too, have friends in Algeria or Niagara or even Nicaragua."

Canadians, seeing a panarama of Canada and of Canada's north that few Canadians have seen regretted that more Canadians couldn't see it.

Prof Wilfrid Heslop, professor of engineering at the University of British Columbia, came up with a suggestion to overcome this.

He suggested that regular aerial tours of the north be arranged for Canadians during the summer months, even if governments have to lend assistance to start them off. He felt that such tours would attract Canadians both as individuals and as groups.

Uranium For Power Plants For 30 Years

NEW YORK (CP) — Canada's top nuclear scientist said Monday Canada has sufficient natural uranium to power Canadian atomic power plants for 30 years or longer.

Dr. W. B. Lewis, vice - president of research and development of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, made the statement in a paper on reactor fuel resources to the atomic industrial forum here.

Head of nuclear research at Canada's Chalk River, Ont., atomic project, Dr. Lewis said he doesn't see any immediate use for fuels for Canadian atomic power plants produced by expensive processing of natural uranium.

There is no prospect of running short of uranium in the next 30 years, or even much beyond that," Dr. Lewis said.

He said power plants can be fuelled by natural uranium or by fuels produced after natural uranium has been in an atomic reactor for a time. One of these fuels is plutonium, also used in the manufacture of atomic bombs.

Dr. Lewis said Canada is interested in the development of economical methods to extract plutonium from spent uranium fuel elements.
