Unusual Twist Given To Racial Struggle

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court has overturned contempt convictions of two officials of the National States Rights party, an Alabama segregationist group.

In an unusual twist in the racial integration struggle, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had—on principle — joined the segregationists in fighting the convictions.

NAACP was concerned that its own activities might be put under a disadvantage if the convictions stood up in the case of the segregationists.

The Supreme Court's decision was announced in a brief, unsigned order.

Dr. Edward R. Fields, information director of the National State' Rights party, and Robert Lyons, youth organizer for the group, were convicted of contempt on the ground they violated an injunction against distributing handbills and holding a rally in Fairfield, Ala.

GOT COURT ORDERS

The City of Fairfield obtained the injunction from an Alabama judge after Fields and Lyons distributed handbills announcing a meeting Oct. 11, 1962, in a private bill.

The handbills contained, among other statements, assertions that "the nigger gets everything he demands.," "Communists in NAACP and Washington say whites have no rights!" and "white supremacy can be saved."

Fields and Lyon appeared in the vicinity of the hall the night of Oct. 11, 1961 and announced to a crowd that the meeting would be held in nearby Lipscomb.

The Jefferson County, Ala., circuit court found Fields and Lyons in contempt and sentenced each to five days in jail and $50 fine. Alabama's supreme court upheld the contempt convictions.

SOUGHT REVERSAL

Reversal of the convictions was sought not only by the NAACP, but also by the American Civil Liberties Union and the U.S. Justice department. Each filed "friend of the court" briefs giving their views.

NAACP said "punishment can not be inflicted for the peaceful exercise of . . . . rights" of free speech, free press and assembly.

The ACLU brief attacked what it said was a growing use of injunctions to prevent speeches and rallies and distribution of literature.

The ACLU is a private organization set up to protect the constitutional rights of Americans. It is made up largely of lawyers and has no political leanings.

The justice department said there was no evidence that Fields and Lyons engaged in activities specifically barred by the injunction or that they "even intended" to evade the injunction. Conviction without evidence of guilt violates the federal guarantee of the process of law, the department said.

Air Industries In Canada Claim Position Precarious

OTTAWA (CP)—The Air Industries Association of Canada is telling the government that it is in a precarious position and that unless "prompt and effective" steps are taken by Ottawa "this situation will deteriorate within two years."

The association says government procurement from the industry has declined steadily to $138,000,000 in 1963 from $400,000,000 in 1953.

On the basis of a recent survey of 27 companies, employment would fall to 14,500 in 1965 from the present figure of 28,000.

The association, which discussed its brief to the government at a press conference here, has already conferred with Industry Minister Drury and Trade Minister Sharp. It plans to see other members of the cabinet, including Prime Minister Pearson.

The association says that while the government is stressing the need for secondary industries and exports, the aircraft industry, with a high degree of technicians and capital, is in decline. In 1962, the industry exported $238,000,000 worth of equipment.

EMPLOYMENT DOWN

The industry employed 47,000 persons in 1957. The association added:

"Canada can ill afford the loss of so high a percentage of its most skilled personnel at a time when the necessity for building a strong and growing economy is so vital."

Amount of research and development funds provided by the Canadian government compared poorly with proportionate funds put up by governments in other countries. There was vacillation in Canada in establishment of roles for the armed forces.

The associations said weapons and equipment for the Canadian armed forces should be made in Canada. If the Canadian industry were relegated to production - sharing subcontracts from other countries—it would lose the state of the art and not be able to develop any new equipment.

Hovercraft Lag Seen By MP From N.S.

OTTAWA (CP)—Canada may be behind the times in not doing more investigation in the use of hovercraft and hydrofoil vessels in ferry service, Robert C. Coates (PC — Cumberland) told the Commons.

He particularly wanted these craft investigated for possible use across Nova Scotia's Minas Basin, cutting 115 miles off the highway route around the head of the basin which juts in from the Bay of Fundy. He spoke in support of his resolution which urged the government to consider the possibility.

The debate was adjourned after 40 minutes when Solicitor-General J. Watson MacNaught said some Maritime members who wanted to speak on the resolution were attending committee meetings.

Mr. Coates said the use of hovercraft could cut down the "tremendous" cost of wharfage and a Minas Basin service could perhaps be combined with the present Digby - Saint John service across the Bay of Fundy.

Ferry service across Minas Basin was suspended in 1940 after 90 years of operation.

HAVE TO TAKE CARS

Gerald A. Regan (L—Halifax) said the feasibility of such a service would depend on finding a craft that could carry cars and trucks. He thought the hovercraft would be more suitable than a hydrofoil vessel because of tide conditions.

But unless it could carry "a substantial number of cars" it would not be suitable. Few people would travel the route without cars or trucks, he said.

G. Roy McWilliam (L—Northumberland - Miramichi) said that if he were in Parrsboro and going around to the Annapolis Valley, "I doubt very much if I would take the ferry." Relative distances had diminished since the old ferry was in operation.

He said that because the basin was entirely within Nova Scotia, he would like to see any proposals come from the provincial government.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A X R

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1♦ (1)	Pass	1♥	Pass
Pass	1♠	2♥	2♠
3♥	Pass	4♥

Opening lead—two of spades.

This hand was played in the national masters pair championship a few years ago. The bidding shown is not really representative of what happened at the various tables, since few of the top players indulge in phony bids.

But that's the way it went at our table, where South got to four hears in the manner shown. North had identified a psychic by passing South's heart response, and he later raised hearts to show that his hand was not completely worthless. South went to four— a doubtful proposition under the circumstances —but succeeded in making the contract.

West led a spade and declarer won the king with the ace and played the A-Q of hearts. West took the king, cashed the queen of spades, and played another spade. Declarer ruffed and gave up a diamond trick. When the suit turned out to be divided 3-3, declarer was able to discard a club on the fourth diamond and thus made four hearts.

At a different table the bidding went: a heart by South, a notrump by North, three hearts, all pass. Fine defense held declarer to nine tricks at this table.

West (Arthur Glatt of Chicago) led a spade. South took the ace and led the A-Q of hearts, just as at the previous table. But Glatt, upon winning the king, returned the ten of clubs. Against this play South had to lose a trick in each suit and he wound up making only three hearts.

Some idea of the effectiveness of West's line of defense can be gleaned from the fact that Glatt got a top score on the deal. All the declarers at the other 17 tables made ten tricks, whether they had bid the game or not.

Note that Glatt had to lead the ten of clubs, not the seven, to gain the trick. Had he led the seven, declarer would have played low from dummy, forcing the queen from East, and would then have returned a club towards the jack, thus avoiding a diamond loser.
